COUNCIL FIGHTS RATE INCREASE

Less Favorable Position Seen For Northwest Wheat Grower In Local Leaders' Report

A determined battle is being waged on three or four "fronts" to save the northwest wheat grower from increasingly severe freight rate discrimination in the handling of the products of the Inland Empire, according to A. H. Nelson, county committeeman for the Eastern Oregon Wheat league.

In charge of the campaign for equitable freight rates is the Tri-State Wheat Transportation council, which was organized through the efforts of the Eastern Oregon Wheat league and the Farm Rate council. The efforts of the tri-state body are directed by a board composed of five members of the Eastern Oregon Wheat league, five growers of eastern Washington and five from northern Idaho.

The seriousness of the freight rate situation is indicated, according to E. H. Miller of Lexington, chairman of the wheat transportation committee, by the fact that during the first few months of 1937 prices received by Inland Empire farmers for their wheat averaged 24 cents a bushel below the national average price, or nearly twice the price differential which prevailed in 1933 when the situation was considered so serious that the North Pacific Emergency Export association was organized to subsidize foreign exports.

One of the first efforts of the tri-state council was to represent Inland Empire growers before the Interstate Commerce commission in attempts to reverse increases in freight rates which have resulted in losses to northwest growers of the newly-developed southeastern market. Through increases in rates from Gulf and Atlantic ports inland and a reduction in rates from middle western soft red winter wheat areas to southeastern states, the Pacific northwest was placed in an unfavorable position in competition with those areas.

These adverse changes in rates became effective in July, 1936. Since that time the council has presented its case at a hearing held in Seattle last August and is now planning to argue the case further before the entire Interstate Commerce commission in Washington, D. C.

Added to these unfavorable developments there has occurred this year an increase of from 10 to 18 per cent in ocean freight rates through the canal on flour and wheat, and still more recently a plea on the part of railroad executives for a general increase of 10 per cent in all freight rates.

Unless the council is successful in gaining a revision of these adverse rate structures, the Pacific northwest wheat grower will suffer losses aggregating millions of dollars annually, according to J. M. Parish, secretary of the Tri-State Wheat Transportation council.

Wheat Committees Announced by Nish

Condon—Plans are rapidly shaping up for the tenth annual meeting of the Eastern Oregon Wheat league, to be held this year at La Grande at the request of wheat farmers from counties east of the Blue mountains, according to C. A. Nish, Mikkalo, president of the league.

Names of members of the various county committees have been announced by President Nish and the executive committee, and will soon be holding meetings to formulate reports. These men will take their recommendations to a general committee meeting to be held in La Grande on December 2, where final reports will be prepared and presented to the league the following day.

County executive committeemen, selected at last year's league meeting to carry on affairs of the league in their respective counties between sessions, are Fred Eppinger, Baker; Lloyd Smith, Gilliam; A. D. Anderson, Jefferson; A. H. Nelson, Morrow; T. M. Rolfe, Sherman; Jim Hill, Umatilla; Gilbert Courtright, Union; Hugh Wilson, Wallowa, and Emile Schanno, Wasco.

Officers of the five principal committees of the league, as announced by President Nish, are as follows:

Committee on Federal Agricultural Programs: Mac Hoke, Pendleton, chairman; E. H. DeLong, La Grange, vice-chairman; R. M. McKennon, Condon, secretary.

Committee on Weed Control and Soil Conservation: Carl Engdahl, Pendleton, chairman; William Meiners, Pendleton, vice-chairman; W. A. Holt, Pendleton, secretary.

Committee on Production, Handling and Marketing: E. M. Hulden, Arlington, chairman; William Powell, Moro, vice-chairman; G. R. Hyslop, Corvallis, secretary.
