Oregon law requires motorists to report all automobile accidents resulting in property damage or in death or injury to any person, and Secretary of State Earl Snell urges persons making reports to fill in all the information requested on the blanks. Only thus, he says, can the reports serve their greatest usefulness in pointing the way to accident prevention.

Motorists in Michigan are given no sympathy because they are ignorant of the motor vehicle law, Secretary of State Earl Snell has learned. The Wolverine State has just issued two million copies of a booklet, "What Every Driver MUST Know," and reading of the booklet is compulsory upon all drivers.

More than half of Oregon's 3032 automobile accidents in January, 1937, occurred on snowy or icy pavements, and more than one third of the accidents involved skidding, Secretary of State Earl Snell said recently.
