To See and to Read

Up until now, there has been nothing said about the school spirit of the teachers or about the way they have participated and helped in making a success of the high school athletic games. It seems only appropriate that a few good words should be circulated around about this and the good examples they are setting. If any one is in doubt of this, let him come to one of the basketball games; and by casting his eyes around on the floor he can see at least three of the teachers right out among the players, giving encouragement, and the rest of them in the audience, where they give their share of the yelling.

Perhaps this would be a good example for many of the high school students to follow.

Heppner's debating team will journey to Pendleton, where the negative team will debate. The affirmative team will stay home to meet Mac-Hi.

Five Years Ago—The junior class play, "Seventeen," is being shown for the last time tonight. . . . Heppner defeated the Ione basketball squad, 25-20, last night. Heppner plays Adams here February 17.

One Year Ago—Mrs. Clark is added to the faculty. . . . Arlington defeated Heppner, 31-19, last Friday night. . . . The Pep club gave their annual assembly, with the seniors winning in the yelling contest. . . . An epidemic of colds is sweeping thru the school.

PINTO-POINTS

Again, as last year, the District 13 basketball tournament goes to Arlington. . . . the dates set for the meet of champions are March 11 and 12. . . . the referee of all games will be Emile Piluso, renowned arbiter of college tilts. . . . Heppner could have had the tournament, but this city's past record for supporting such basketball get-togethers was one that did not merit its being awarded another. . . . a meet of this nature, the district tournament being second largest only to the state tournament, brings to the host city squads from a most spacious territory. . . with these basketball teams journey the home town rooters, who come to be entertained, and very seldom do they travel with the accompaniment of a flat pocket book, especially with the recreational expectations of basketball in mind. . . all in all, the business houses profit as well as the school. . . such will be the case at Arlington in the second week of March.

Of the backboard. . . A school having an enrollment exceeding 150 is considered of class "A" ranking and must compete in tournaments with schools of similar nature. . . Hermiston is now officially one of that ranking. . . the complaint that the Bulldog institution had over 150 students made the powers that be sit up and take notice, for Hermiston is now in the same district as Pendleton, Mac-Hi, The Dalles and Hood River. Arlington used the "sleeper play," one that consists of a long pass to a man under the basket, resulting as a general rule in two points, more effectively than any team seen yet this season. . . the Honkers are also masters of the whirl shot, a good scoring threat that is very difficult to guard. Players still push each other around in endeavoring to be sure they are facing their own basket on a jump ball. . . according to the new rules, no particular facing is required. An amusing incident occurred Saturday night in connection with the McLaughlin game. . . a Pioneer reserve, one Mr. Nelson by name, had been complaining, in a friendly sort of way, to Coach Fox that he didn't get to play enough. . . the Mac-Hi second string was to open the game, and just before the referee's starting whistle, the Pioneer mentor notified the Nelson lad he was acting captain. . . that just about got the best of the startled second stringer. . . in fact, he was so dumbfounded he hardly knew what to do during the game. During the summer, Frank O'Neill, handsome Hermiston coach, was under employment of a Tillamook dairy, driving a shiny, new white milk truck for this concern. . . on his route, which happened to cover several coast towns, including Rockaway, were several store clerks of the so-called "weaker sex". . . a question, the answer to which they had long been seeking, was whether or not he was married. . . later information revealed, much to the disappointment of his feminine admirers, that he was. Students this year are more and more availing themselves of the opportunity of making the best use of the gymnasium at all possible times. . . when not being occupied by the class and club teams, it is well filled by free lancers who have inclinations along the basketball line, whether they possess championship form or not. Almost everyone had the general impression that the freshmen were more than eager to defeat the seniors for the intramural championship, but their anxiety was underestimated. . . one freshman voiced the opinion that he'd rather win the senior game than a big game like the one with Mac-Hi. Sponsored by the "H" club, the picture, "Basketball and Its Forms," shown last Monday evening at the local gymnasium was, without a doubt one of the finest of its kind ever produced. . . there was just about as much basketball packed into that hour and a half of reeled entertainment as one sees during an entire season. The locals have won five games and lost seven, not an outstanding record but far from one of the opposite nature. . . to run in most regular order to draw to run in most regular order to draw crowds of any size to future games. . . Heppner doesn't win all the time, no team can do that, but they do fight and try to take victories; yet, practically any estimate as to the number in attendance at Saturday's game would be entirely too liberal. Within the near future, an announcement will be made public that will startle basketball fans of one sector and upset the same of another with a force equal to the explosion of a powder train!

Humor

Emmett Kenny: "Are you superstitious, Art?"

Art McAttee: "Not at all."

Emmett: "Then, you can lend me $13."

Mr. Blankenship: "Why are you putting a 10c stamp on that letter.

It surely isn't over weight." Dora Bailey: "No, but the color matches the stationery so beautifully."

Mr. Peavy: "A new dress? And how can I pay for it?"

Mrs. Peavy: "That's your business. I didn't marry you to give you financial advice."

Clayton W.: "I'll let you know I'm not a two-faced man."

Anna J.: "Luckily, my dear; one face like your's is enough."

G. Casebeer: "How do you like my new necklace?"

Rise Cunningham: "It must be artificial. If it were real, you would have left the price tag on it!"

Daughter: "You've got some nerve to bargain with that dressmaker whom you don't pay anyway."

Mother: "Exactly! I want to diminish his losses."

Bill Browning: "What goes 999 klunk, 999 klunk, 999 klunk?"

Vernon K.: "Search me. What?"

Bill B.: "A centipede with a wooden leg."

Mother: "Marvin, were you a good boy in church yesterday?"

Marvin: "Yes, mother. A man offered me a big plate of money and I said, 'No, thank you.'"

Nit: "When you get upset at your work, do you ever bite your nails?"

Wit: "Gosh, no. I'm a carpenter."

Most girls admit that the race is to the swift; but when the sailors come to town, it's usually to the fleet.

State Druggists Assist Pharmacy Students

Corvallis—Oregon druggists have made it financially possible for many students of the school of pharmacy at Oregon State college to complete their courses during the past 12 years by maintaining a loan fund from which needy pharmacy students may borrow. During the 12 years since it was started, a total of $11,425 has been contributed, from which 110 loans, averaging $87.31 each, have been made to students. Not a single loss has ever been incurred through failure of a student to repay a loan.

The plan was inaugurated by John F. Allen, Corvallis druggist, and a '95 graduate of OSC, who is treasurer of the board of trustees through which the educational fund is handled. Other officers are S. A. Matthieu, Portland, president; Adolph Ziefle, dean of the school of pharmacy, secretary, and A. S. Kier and L. S. Stovall, who are president and secretary, respectively, of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical association.

Henry Smouse came to town on Tuesday morning from the north Ione farm, bringing Herman Bottzer, an employee, to the doctor for treatment for a sprained ankle. Bottzer's injury was sustained by stepping on a rock in the road.
