Horses, Mules, Still Lead Values

Evidently horses and mules are far from being outmoded in Oregon or the United States as a whole, according to latest government figures obtained by the animal husbandry department at Oregon State college.

On January of this year Oregon had 155,000 horses valued at $13,125,000, and 800 mules valued at $730,000. The combined value is five times as much as is invested in swine in Oregon and almost equal to the value of Oregon sheep. In the country as a whole the aggregate value of horses and mules is $1,562,081,000, which exceeds the amount invested in any other class of livestock. The value of all dairy cattle is 206,000,000 below that of horses and mules.
