

Plans Completed For Second 4-H Summer Session

Oregon State College, Corvallis—Of the more than 1800 Oregon boys and girls expected to attend the twenty-fourth annual 4-H club summer school at OSC June 6 to 17, approximately 70 percent will hold scholarships awarded them by various business and community organizations, fairs, individuals and others in recognition of excellent work done, according to H. C. Seymour, state club leader.

"The increasing number of scholarships awarded each year is due to the fact that those who offer them see the inspiration and enthusiasm as well as new information and other benefits brought back by those who attend the club summer school, and plan to make it possible for more boys and girls to attend the following year," Mr. Seymour says.

Three dormitories and 20 or more fraternities and sororities will be used this year to house the club boys and girls, with the younger members living in the dormitories. Attendance is limited to club members over 12 and under 21 years of age, whose 4-H projects are in good standing. Scholarships awarded to members under 12 years old will be held until they reach that age.

The program this year will follow the usual plan of class work in the mornings, assembly and recreation in the afternoons, and parties, movies and other entertainment in the evenings. From 70 to 100 classes will be running each morning during the two-weeks session, with some 75 or more OSC faculty members as instructors. Many new courses are being offered this year, Mr. Seymour says.

The club members at summer school have a self-government plan, by which groups of older boys and girls are chosen as officers and executive committee members to see that all goes well in the OSC 4-H community. Each county delegation has its own chaperone or adviser. Older boys and girls, usually college students who were former 4-H club members, are in charge of the various houses and halls.
