Youth Finances Reported Meager In Rural Survey

Oregon State College—With earning additional money listed as first concern among older unmarried rural youth of Oregon, those who conducted a recent survey of the situation inquired into the present financial status of those between the ages to 16 to 25 on farms.

A wide variation existed which had little or no relationship to the school status of the individual. The median incomes, or the ones which divided the groups in the center so far as numbers are concerned, was $185 a year for the men and $90 a year for the women. Individual incomes ranged from less than $50 a year to more than $1250, though only five out of the 400 surveyed were in this high group.

Wages for work at home or a share in the farm receipts was the principal source of income for a fourth of the men out of school and one ninth of the men still in school. Two thirds of the young people interviewed had earned money working away from home during the year preceding the interview. It was the major source of income for 43 per cent. The amount received varied from $2 to $1500, and the type of work from packing prunes to grading timber.

Many of the young men had saved some money or acquired property. Of the total, 28 per cent had life insurance, 39 per cent had savings accounts, 33 per cent owned livestock, 29 per cent owned automobiles, and 13 per cent owned farm machinery or similar property.

Considerably fewer of the young women reported savings or property. Only 8 per cent had life insurance, 25 per cent had savings accounts, 10 per cent owned livestock, 2 per cent automobiles, and 7 per cent other property including musical instruments, hope chests and furniture.

Complete results of the study, made by J. R. Beck, OSC, and Bernard Joy, USDA, have been published as national extension service circular No. 277.

a healthful and invigorating exercise. It must be remembered, however, that man is not physically equipped for aquatic life and there are certain precautions that should be taken by all those who engage in this sport. Here are a few don'ts that every swimmer should know:

- Don't go in swimming for at least an hour after meals.
- Don't swim alone except under observation of experienced swimmers.
- Don't try deep water until you have mastered the art of swimming.
- Don't swim too far out until you have tested your endurance in the water.
- Don't swim in pools in which the bottom is not clearly visible.
- Don't dive unless you know the water depth is safe.
- Don't stay in too long.

Remember too, that even a swimming pool unless it is equipped with recirculation, filtration and chlorination equipment may soon become unfit for its intended purpose. Proper maintenance of recirculation and purification equipment is as important as proper equipment. Middle ear infections leading to mastoid trouble are after traceable to insanitary pools. If sinus infection is already present excessive swimming and diving may cause purulent material to be carried from the nasal cavity to the middle ear and set up infection so persons with head colds should stay away from pools, and swimmers who are subject to colds should avoid underwater swimming and diving when there is any doubt as to the purity of the water.

Bathing Dangers

From State Board of Health

Oregon, like most of the other Western states, has gone in heavily for swimming pools largely because most of its streams are polluted and unfit for bathing purposes. Many persons still bathe in the rivers and creeks and they are often the people who add to the number of typhoid cases. When the sun is hot and the water looks cool and refreshing, little thought is given to possible pollution and on a day's outing the temptation is usually too great to be resisted. Swimming is a healthful exercise if indulged in properly. From a safety standpoint the old swimming hole is gone today. We depend on the artificial swimming pool to furnish lifeguards and safe water, continually purified to give the greatest amount of health protection.

Swimming instructions should be included in the curriculum of every school and should be encouraged as
