Ross Surveys Routes For Bonneville Lines

Immediately following the Public Works allotment of $10,750,000 for Bonneville's initial transmission system, Administrator J. D. Ross set out on a personal survey of the routes of the proposed power lines.
Accompanied by Charles E. Carey, principal construction engineer, the Bonneville administrator made a detailed inspection of the region between Grand Coulee and the lower Columbia river dam. On foot and by car Ross and three engineers from his staff investigated the 250-mile route of the "high line" that will link the federal hydroelectric projects of the Northwest.
Administrator Ross pointed out that the 220,000 volt line to Grand Coulee was the key to opening the power markets of eastern Oregon and Idaho, and developing an integrated power system that will economically serve all of the Northwest. According to Secretary of the Interior Ickes, the high tension circuit will not only enable the government to recover its investment in Bonneville dam at an earlier date, but it will materially advance the development of Grand Coulee by furnishing a market which Coulee can take over. Mr. Ross predicted that by the time that dam was completed, the demand for power in western Oregon and Washington would be so great that it would absorb Bonneville's entire output of 504,000 kilowatts.
The major circuits in Oregon will include a 110,000 volt line from the dam to The Dalles by way of Hood River. Approximately half the population of Oregon will be reached by a line that will extend down the Willamette valley from Portland, passing through Oregon City, Salem, Albany and Eugene. This line will provide a strong "intertie" with the southern part of the state and help meet an increased power demand of the municipal system at Eugene.
Returning from his survey of the transmission network, Mr. Ross pointed out that the lines he will build are in no sense the limit of his program. They are merely the beginning. Extensions of the initial transmission system will be made as rapidly as markets are developed and construction funds made available. The proposed lines are designed to connect with existing and future distribution system that will serve a wide area.

Church Has Big Place in Rural Social Program

The church, movies and the automobile are the chief factors in the social life of older rural young people in Oregon, according to the survey made by J. R. Beck, rural service specialist at Oregon State college, and Barnard Joy, agriculturist with the national extension service.
The organization to which the largest number of young people belonged were church, Sunday school and young people's organizations of the church. More than half (52.4 per cent) of the 410 young people between the ages of 16 and 25 belonged to the church, while 26.8 per cent considered themselves members of the Sunday school. Exactly 25 per cent were members of such young people's organizations as Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and B. Y. P. U.
The typical young person in Tillamook, Union, Clackamas and Lane counties, where the study was made, attended one of the church organizations, went to the movies and went auto riding with others for pleasure each on an average of three times a month. The approximate average attendance at meetings of organizations not associated with the church and at suppers, parties and picnics was once a month. In addition, the typical young person interviewed attended one or two fairs a year and took three trips to places more than 50 miles from his home. The average total participation of young women in social activities was 204 events a year, compared to 156 by the young men.
While many of the young people expressed keen interest in new rural extension organizations which would give them more social contact, the average total social participation for all those interviewed shows 178 events a year, which is almost 3 1/2 a week, or one every two days.
"A group program sponsored by the extension service could in part satisfy the needs felt by the young people when they indicated that 'getting additional education,' 'de-
