Yellowstone, Copper Mining Seen on Trip

Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Turner returned home Sunday from an 8-day motor trip on which they "gypsied" through Yellowstone National park, learned first-hand of the copper mining industry at Butte and Anaconda, Mont., and otherwise spent an interesting vacation.

Driving to Boise the first day, they stopped at Vale for a short visit with Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Atherton, uncle and aunt of Mrs. Turner's. Between Boise and Twin Falls, sight of the Thousand Springs, reputedly emerging from a hidden river, and the huge power plant at Shoshone falls were enjoyed. The big power plant supplies power for the entire state of Idaho. From Twin Falls to Pocatello, beyond where the green wheat indicated harvest a month later than that at home.

A sight of the famous Jackson Hole country was seen from an elevation of 8400 feet and angle of 45 degrees in the Teton mountains. These mountains and the pass across them before entering the park was considered one of the highlights of the trip. The snow covered Grand Teton towering above the other peaks at a height of almost 14,000 feet was a beautiful sight. Just before reaching the south entrance of the park a violent electrical storm was encountered.

First attraction in the park was Old Faithful geyser, seen the evening of the first day there lighted by beams of a 1500 candlepower beacon light. The second day was spent hiking, viewing geysers, springs, rivers, inspecting the camp, museum, picture studio, hotel, watching fat folk splash in the natorium, chasing black bear away from cabin and trying to sleep.

Into the mountains by way of Grand canyon and Yellowstone falls and border of Great Yellowstone lake, claimed highest fresh water lake in the world at elevation of 7761 feet, and a 14-mile side drive to see 62 head of grizzly and black bear being fed, another outstanding sight as reported.

The park was left the fourth day through the east gate over 8559-foot Sylvan pass to Cody, Wyo., with pleasant memories of the park, no report of which would be complete, say the visitors, without mention of the excellent accommodations everywhere and the high type of service given by employees, most of whom are college students. After viewing "Wild Bill" Cody's memorial statue, the route followed through Powell, Deaver, Frannie and on to Bridger, Mont. From Red Lodge the Cooke highway was followed through the northeast entrance of the park to Mammoth Hot Springs, thence thru the north gate to Livingston, Bozeman and Butte, Mont.

At Butte a visit was enjoyed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jay King, friends, and through Jay, Jr., mining engineer and sampler in the copper mines a liberal education in copper mining was obtained. His information was supplemented by a visit to the huge smelter at Anaconda, said to be the largest in the world. Missoula, Wallace and Kellogg, Idaho, were visited on the return, through Spokane, Pasco and Hermiston.

REPORT HEAVY RAIN

Eric Bergstrom and son "Skeet" took advantage of the lay-off from harvest caused by Thursday evening's storm to transact business in the city the following day. They reported the second rain of the storm at their Gooseberry farm to have been the heaviest they had ever seen. In fifteen minutes time a large space of level ground about the house was covered by water four inches deep, and one of the boys on the farm got into difficulty attempting to rescue some small pigs. Two boys who were after the cows noticed the storm brewing and headed for the house. They were caught before reaching it, however, and looked like they had been dragged through a river. Though some of the tall grain had been laid low by the heavy rainfall and hard wind that accompanied it, they anticipated that most of it would be saved.

J. E. Swanson of Ione was a business visitor in the city for a short time Monday morning. Mr. Swanson is a leading grain broker of the neighboring city where activity in receiving the new grain crop is now mighty lively.

L. W. BRIGGS SAYS THURSDAY'S RAIN HEAVIER THAN ONE PRECEDING FLOOD

When L. W. Briggs, county treasurer and octogenarian, drove to Heppner Junction last Thursday evening to meet his daughter, Miss Opal Briggs, and Mrs. Jennie McCarter who were returning from a week's vacation, he thought for a time that he was encountering a second Heppner flood. He went through water clear over the tires on the highway above Ione, and beyond Ione it was washing the windshield in dense sheets, necessitating progress at a snail's pace. Having gone through the storm at the time of the big flood, he believed he could safely say that the fall encountered on this trip was heavier than that at Heppner preceding the memorable flood.

In the heaviest part of the storm, the ditch at either side of the highway was flowing brimful and the highway itself resembled a stream, so that he could only guess where the road actually was.

On the return he found the highway guardsmen detouring traffic over the ridge road between Ione and Lexington, and not being familiar with the road was at a loss to know which road to take at one place where three roads came together. Fate was with him here, as Harry Tamblin, county engineer, came along as he debated the problem, and piloted his car over the correct route. In traversing this road, occasional flood sloughs were encountered without warning, drenching his car's exterior with muddy water.

Recalling the heavy rain of June 14, 1903, preceding Heppner's deluge, Mr. Briggs said he was in the house when the rain was descending. Noticing a neighbor's cow in the yard with its head stuck down under a rose bush, he decided to go put the animal in the barn. Donning a hard-brimmed hat, he ventured forth, but the force of the rain drove the brim down over his eyes. He then went back to the house and put a big cowboy hat on over the other one. But again the brims of the two hats were driven down over his nostrils, almost suffocating him. Realizing then why the animal had its head protected under the bush, he decided to leave it there.

BOYS TO CAMP

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Crawford motored to Portland last Sunday, taking four boys from this county to the Beaver Boy State camp at Hill Military academy. Included were their son Hugh, Harry Tamblin, Jr., Henry Peterson, Jr., and Raymond Turner. The boys are spending the week at the camp, sponsored by the state American Legion, studying government through organization of all state, county and municipal departments among the juvenile representatives from all parts of the state.
