"Always at Your Service"

A TRUE STORY FROM PACIFIC POWER & LIGHT COMPANY'S SERVICE RECORDS

Without warning on the evening of July 27, 1937, a 65-mile gale suddenly struck Dayton, Wash., knocking the City Hall flag pole across one of Pacific Power & Light Company's main transmission lines and flinging a large tree across the other line. The city was instantly plunged into darkness. In and around The Dalles, Pasco, Yakima, Walla Walla and Enterprise lightning destroyed at least a dozen distribution transformers—blew the fuses in scores of others.

Yet, because men of Pacific Power & Light Company are experienced in meeting emergencies of all kinds and have new equipment at hand ready for instant use, service was restored so quickly that in Dayton, for instance, the theatre had power for the 9 o'clock "movie". In other communities, use of emergency facilities restored normal service before some people were aware there had been any trouble.

STORES OF EXTRA EQUIPMENT PLAY VITAL PART IN MAINTAINING 24-HOUR ELECTRIC SERVICE!

Spot storms such as the one described above are rare, but they're factors that must be considered at all times in the generation and distribution of electricity. Supplies of wire, poles, transformers, insulators and other hardware must be kept at strategic points so as to be instantly available. Crews must know every inch of the company's lines—must know where switches can be made—when electricity from another district can be cut in.

Pacific Power & Light Company is prepared for all emergencies, both large and small which may occur in any of its twelve districts in Oregon and Washington. This company's crews of skilled men and its material resources are so organized that they can quickly be mobilized at any point on the system. Responsible for the planning, the coordination of crews and equipment, and the work necessary to maintain constant electric service are the 761 men and women who comprise this company's organization. Some of these people are your friends and neighbors.

Are you taking full advantage of low-cost Pacific Power & Light Company electricity? It's one of the most inexpensive things you buy... for Pacific Power & Light Company's rates have been steadily reduced until they are among the lowest in the United States. This is definitely a community where electricity is cheap. So use low-cost P.P.&L. electricity to save time, work and money. The cost of doing all your housework the modern electric way is just a few cents a day.
