

Unusual Season Brings Problems In Fall Seeding

The hot, dry summer in western Oregon has disrupted many established cropping plans, making necessary readjustments this fall, and in eastern Oregon the prevalence of trashy summer fallow is bringing some new seeding problems, points out Dr. D. D. Hill, associate agronomist at the Oregon experiment station, in a recent broadcast over KOAC.

Most winter and spring seedings of red clover failed in the valley this year, except where irrigation was available. In many cases the logical legume to plant on fields where red clover died out is Austrian winter peas, especially where a cash crop is wanted, says Dr. Hill. Where a hay crop is desired, common vetch offers the best possibility, although vetch used for hay does not serve as a soil building legume in the rotation.

Fall-sown barley could fill a more important place in western Oregon now that a more satisfactory variety has been developed, believes Dr. Hill. Last fall the experiment station distributed a limited amount of seed of a new variety, Santiam. It is sufficiently winter hardy for western Oregon, and has proved highly productive on most soils. A small amount of seed is available in most valley counties, in addition to a limited supply available from the experiment station.

An important factor in the handling of trashy summer fallow is the necessity of weed control, experience has shown. Where the fall is dry and it is not possible to kill weeds before seeding, it is highly important to get the wheat started quickly. This is done sometimes by planting deeply enough with a single disc drill to get the seed down to moisture so that it will germinate promptly before the weeds sprout in the surface layer. If the wheat cannot be planted down to moisture, Hill believes it is best to wait until fall rains germinate the weed seeds, so that the first crop of weeds may be killed. In some cases, it is even desirable to leave a field for spring planting if other methods of weed control cannot be followed.

Trailer Kitchen Taken on Round Of Fairs by OSC

The traveling kitchen exhibit of the Oregon State college extension service which was viewed last year by some 19,244 men and women in 12 counties of the state, is being shown again this year at fairs and other events in 14 counties.

The trailer kitchen represents a modern kitchen, at moderate cost, designed to meet the needs of an average farm family, and contains many valuable suggestions on construction of built-ins and kitchen arrangement for families planning to build or remodel, or perhaps just to improve the present kitchen. It was planned, designed and constructed through the cooperation of the agricultural extension service, home economics research and the agricultural engineering department at O. S. C. Mrs. Virginia Schneider, assistant in the home economics extension service, is in charge of the kitchen at the various demonstrations.

The kitchen was shown at the 4-H fair at Cottage Grove August 26 and 27. The September schedule is as follows: County fair, Monmouth, Sept. 2; state fair, Salem, Sept. 5-11; county-wide day, Newberg, Sept. 12; county-wide day, Hood River, Sept. 14; county fair, Tygh Valley, Sept. 16, 17, 18; county-wide day, Arlington, Sept. 19; county-wide days at Heppler, Sept. 20; Milton, Sept. 22 and Pendleton, Sept. 23; fair, Hermiston, Sept. 24; fair, Moro, Sept. 25; county-wide day, The Dalles, Sept. 26; Bonneville, Sept. 27; and county-wide day, Oregon City, Sept. 29.

"Creating Safer Communities," a booklet prepared by the Oregon department of state in cooperation with the National Conservation bureau, has been received and will be used during the coming winter in connection with the organization of community safety councils, according to Secretary of State Earl Snell.

Facts for Drivers

From the office of Earl W. Snell, Secretary of State.

One of the most valuable traffic signals from the standpoint of the highway engineer is the flashing beacon, whether it be red or amber. The value of this signal, however, rests entirely upon the degree of observance which motorists accord it.

The two chief reasons for its importance are its high visibility due to its bright, intermittent flashes, and the fact that it causes only momentary stopping at intersections where traffic is too light to warrant a periodic signal.

While more drivers treat the red and amber beacons as though they carried the same message, this is not the case. The amber beacon says, in effect, "Dangerous intersection—be on guard." Motorists should approach such intersections slowly, and proceed through them with caution.

The red beacon, however, says, "Dangerous intersection—STOP before crossing." These beacons normally are placed so as to protect streams of fast traffic from side-traffic interruptions, and drivers who enter such a street without first stopping endanger both themselves and motorists on the through street.

Installation of flashing red beacons at several intersections on Portland's east side cut accidents at those intersections nearly 75 per cent within three months after their placement, thus proving their merit when scientifically located and properly observed.

Grain Situation Slows Recovery In Farm Returns

With business conditions and the demand outlook for farm products showing some improvement, the long, sharp decline in the general level of farm prices was reversed during July, says the current monthly review of the agricultural situation by the O. S. C. extension service. The upturn in the general farm price index in Oregon was from 61 per cent of the 1925-1930 average level to 63 per cent.

Improvement in the farm price situation was rather general, except grains, and occurred despite somewhat better crop yield prospects over the country generally. Compared with April, 1937, however, which marked the farm price peak of recent years, the Oregon index in July, 1938, at 63 was down 30 points, and 24 points under July last year.

Sharply lower prices for wheat and the feed grains and materially lower prices for butterfat, wool and lambs account largely for the sharp decline in the Oregon farm price index from April, 1937, to June, 1938.

With respect to crop prospects, the report says that there will be a general abundance of food crops this year, while the supply of feed grains and hay in prospect is large enough in most parts of the country to provide plenty of feed for animal production.

More detailed information is given in the circular relative to potatoes, beans, wheat, feed grains, hay, fruit and truck crops, and other items.

The report, which also contains the annual mid-summer wheat outlook report of the extension service, is available from county agents or direct from the college. It contains several statistical tables and charts pertaining to the wheat situation and data on farm prices, costs and demand.

Gasoline sales in Oregon during the first seven months of this year reached the record-breaking total of 126,485,864 gallons, according to Secretary of State Earl Snell. The tax on this gallonage amounted to $6,324,293.20.
