U. O. Gets Ready For Greatest Year

University of Oregon, Eugene, Sept. 14—Optimistic over prospects for the greatest year the institution has ever had, early returning older students and staff members of the University of Oregon began work this week in earnest for the coming fall term.

With "Freshman week" stepped up to September 16 for new students who desire to look over fraternities and sororities, older members of the Greek letter organizations are now hard at work getting their houses shined up for the reception of "rushes." Fully half of the sophomores, juniors and seniors for this year are already on the campus.

Here to get the jump on their fellow students, scores of job seekers are also already in Eugene. These enterprising young men and women are looking for places where they can work for their board and room, or part time for pay. Many are already located, it is said.

Faculty members are all on hand, most of them busy making out class schedules and getting ready for increased numbers of students in practically all courses. The first faculty meeting, at which time the entire staff will be present, has been set for Wednesday, September 21.

Prospects for an all-time record enrollment this year are excellent, it is declared by Dr. Earl M. Pallett, registrar. Figures announced by C. L. Constance, assistant registrar, show an increase of 10 per cent in applications from new students over this time a year ago. Enrollment of older students is expected to keep pace.

Only students who plan to join sororities or fraternities need to report for "pre-freshman week" which starts Friday, September 16, it is announced by Karl W. Onthank, dean of personnel. New students not interested in the social organizations are to report September 20. Older students will register September 23 and 24, and all classes start September 26.
