LOOKING FORWARD

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN, Publicity Director, Republican National Committee

Much has been said in recent weeks about "coattail riding." Mr. Roosevelt's friends assume that any Democrat elected in the last six years achieved success solely because of him. The results in some of the Democratic primaries this year, however, have put a big dent in that bit of Rooseveltian egotism.

Nothing, however, has been said about the "coattail riding" which Mr. Roosevelt has done. With little regard for the facts, Mr. Roosevelt blithely takes all credit for every financial reform achieved in the last six years. Not once has he shared any credit whatever with anyone else for the improved banking laws, the Securities and Exchange Commission or the insurance of bank deposits. Mr. Roosevelt forever would have us believe that none but he ever recognized evils or sought their correction by governmental action.

Lest We Forget

The truth of the matter is that legislation reforming the banks and stock trading would have been passed if we never heard about Mr. Roosevelt. Actually the deposit insurance law, sponsored by Republican Senator Arthur Vandenberg, was enacted over Mr. Roosevelt's "bitter" opposition.

Senator Carter Glass, whom Mr. Roosevelt now classifies as a hard-hearted reactionary, is more responsible than any other man for the reformation of the banking system. It was he who first cried out against what Wall Street was doing, even before the 1929 stock market crash.

It was he who in January, 1931, sponsored and conducted, with the support of Republicans, an investigation to ascertain the weaknesses of the banking structure in order to remedy them. It was he who fought through Congress the first remedial banking legislation in 1931-32. It was he who drafted and piloted through the Senate, despite a filibuster by Mr. Roosevelt's friend Huey P. Long, a more comprehensive banking reform bill in the winter of 1932-33—a bill which the Democratic-controlled house refused to consider before Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated.

It was the Senator from Virginia who, after Mr. Roosevelt became President, guided to passage the bill which he and a Republican-controlled senate committee had drafted months previously. It was Senator Glass who, supported by Republicans, drafted the legislation now known as the Banking Act of 1935.

What Republicans Did

It was Senator Frederick Wolcott, Connecticut Republican, who sponsored in February, 1932, the resolution for an investigation of stock market practices—an investigation which was the basis for the Security and Exchange Commission Act. It was a Republican-controlled senate committee which conducted this investigation for eleven months before Mr. Roosevelt entered the White House. It was this committee that employed Ferdinand Pecora as counsel to conduct the investigation.

But, most amazing of all, in view of Mr. Roosevelt's current boast that he gave the county bank deposit insurance, is that fact that three months after he entered the White House he opposed in writing the deposit insurance provision, then known as the "Vandenberg Amendment."

It was Senator Vandenberg who sponsored and fought to successful passage insurance of bank deposits. The Associated Press recognized that fact, for in a Washington dispatch dated May 25, 1933, it stated:

"In an amazing burst of speed the Senate adopted the Vandenberg Amendment and then because of the powerful popularity of this immediate bank insurance thus provided by the Vandenberg Amendment the Senate passed the Glass Bill itself."

Vandenberg Given Credit

Leo T. Crowley, Democratic chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, recognized that fact when in 1934 he called Senator Vandenberg "the father of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act." Judge L. E. Birdsell, F. D. I. C. counsel, recognized it when he declared that Senator Vandenberg "is perhaps more responsible than any other individual for putting into the Banking Act of 1933 the provisions which made it possible to insure deposits in banks beginning last January."

Yet now, when other New Deal programs are falling apart, Mr. Roosevelt boasts that he and his Administration gave the country deposit insurance. It is certainly true that Federal bank deposit is one thing which saves the present depression from as obvious and as deep a debacle as the last one. Indeed, were it not for bank deposit insurance the Roosevelt depression might easily become more serious than the situation in 1932-33.

But Mr. Roosevelt is entitled to no credit—directly or indirectly—for initiating Federal bank deposit insurance. He was "bitterly opposed to it." He deserves credit only for appointing an exceedingly able F. D. I. C. board after the law was passed over his opposition.

Instead of spending their time writing painful alibis for the failure of the Roosevelt "purge," let the New Deal propagandists undertake to challenge these contentions. If they lack the hardihood to do that, then at least, they should stop Mr. Roosevelt in his effort to save face from grabbing the coattails of Republicans and Democrats whom he now denounces.

Student Earnings Found High at OSC

Oregon State College—OSC students earned last year a total of $212,380.28, when scholarships, fellowships and NYA payments are included, according to figures gathered by E. B. Lemon, registrar, at the request of the central office of the state system. This figure does not include student loan fund distribution in the amount of $38,406.

Items in the total are as follows: NYA, $35,118.14; state scholarships, $5,683.50; fellowships, $31,441.68; college labor roll, $79,455.96; placement through men's employment service, $44,876; placement through women's employment service, $15,765.

Mr. Lemon points out that even this figure is probably incomplete inasmuch as many students obtain work without the fact being recorded by college authorities. In all probabilities such earnings would add about $20,000, he said. Student earnings during the summer vacation period are difficult to estimate, but from self-help figures included on registration blanks, Lemon believes that such summer earnings aggregate about $420,000.
