STATION SITE SELECTION SOON

Oregon State College—Final selection of a site for the million dollar agricultural experimental laboratory for the western states is expected some time in November by E. H. Wiegand, professor of food products industries at OSC, who has just completed his service on the special federal commission to survey research possibilities in this area. The commission on which he served was asked to make no recommendations regarding actual location of the station, but merely to report on present facilities and on surplus agricultural products available for research in the western states.
