LOOKING FORWARD

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN, Publicity Director, Republican National Committee

Broken promises by President Roosevelt and his New Deal supporters have become the regular order of business to such an extent that the country is no longer shocked by such demonstrations of insincerity. It has virtually come to the point that only those old-fashioned people who have a regard for truth expect New Dealers to keep their promises.

Undoubtedly this is the explanation for the failure of a recent column by the publicity director of the Democratic National Committee to attract any attention. In other days the column we have in mind would have been front page news and would have caused endless comment for days because he pulled the bed clothes off the New Dealers. The Democratic publicity director in this column undertook to defend President Roosevelt's endorsement as "liberals" of candidates Downey and Olson, despite their espousal of a crackpot scheme to devise stamped script, or what is called "funny money," to pay a pension of $30 every Thursday to all over 50 years old. Senator McAdoo characterized the scheme as a "cruel delusion of old and deserving people."

Tongues In Cheeks

The official Democratic spokesman, however, refused to be excited about the Downey-Olson crackpot scheme. He strongly indicated that the promises of these two New Dealers would be forgotten as soon as the gentlemen were elected. He thought it was quite all right for a candidate to endorse such a plan "with his tongue in his cheek for campaign purposes."

"Obviously," he added, "it is not the highest type of statesmanship to espouse a movement in which you do not believe for the sake of compassing an election," but he thought it was quite in order for the President to endorse candidates doing so. Now, of course, that is according to the established New Deal ritual, as we have known it for the last five years. But none in the Roosevelt camp before has so brazenly and blatantly exposed it. Nevertheless, it is good New Deal doctrine, carefully set forth in Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold's "The Folklore of Capitalism." This book is the New Deal Bible. It is to the New Deal what Adolf Hitler's "Mein Kampf" is to the Nazis.

Among his "Principles of Political Dynamics," Mr. Arnold writes that "institutional creeds, such as law, economics, or theology, must be false in order to function effectively" and he adds that "this paradoxical statement means that they must express contradictory ideals, and must authoritatively suppress any facts which interfere with those ideals."

Must Be False to be Effective

"The creed of any institution," Mr. Thurman writes in further explanation, "is public presentation of a drama in which the institution is the hero. The play is spoiled unless the machinery behind the scenes is carefully concealed. In this lies the explanation of the paradox that legal and economic principles must be false in order to be effective."

Mr. Arnold specifically applied his creed so that none might mistake his meaning. Speaking of former President Hoover, he says that "it was his sincerity that wrecked his Administration." As Frederick H. Stinchfield, former President of the American Bar Association, recently said: "no cause could die for a better religion."

Harry Hopkins with his famous wisecrack that the people were "too dumb to understand" expressed the same idea in subtler or more pointed language, while Hitler in his book puts it thusly:

"It is not the task of propaganda to weigh the various rights. It must, on the contrary, exclusively underline the new position."

Mr. Arnold and now the Democratic publicity director are spoiling the play by failing to keep "the machinery behind the scenes carefully concealed." Mr. Arnold may be excused, for he committed his indiscretion while a professor at Yale. As for the Democratic publicity director, well, there was a time when he did not regard Mr. Roosevelt as a hero. Those words just probably slipped out.

Roosevelt Words Recalled

In all events, since with this the Roosevelt Administration, a creed "must be false in order to be effective," we can now understand what was written and said in the last five years. Now for the first time we can appreciate Mr. Roosevelt's 1932 declarations:

"I accuse the present Administration of being the greatest spending Administration in peace-time in all our history. . . .

"I shall approach the problem of carrying out the plain precept of our party, which is to reduce the cost of current Federal Government operations by 25 per cent. . . .

"I propose to use this position of high responsibility (the Presidency) to discuss up and down the country, in all seasons and at all times, the duty of reducing taxes, of increasing the efficiency of government, of cutting out the underbrush around our governmental structure, of getting the most public service for every dollar paid in taxation. That I pledge you, and nothing I have said in the campaign transcends in importance this covenant with the taxpayers of the United States."

But why go on? Similar quotations uttered during the last five years by Mr. Roosevelt and the New Dealers fill a book of several hundred pages. They were just actors on the stage, speaking their lines, with their tongues in their cheeks. The sole purpose was to be elected.

Just keep in mind, the next time the magic voice comes over the radio, that the New Deal proceeds on the principle that a creed "must be false in order to be effective."

Have Boys, Girls Play Together, Now Urged

The growing realization among recreational leaders that boys and girls should have more opportunities to play together, rather than being separated as is usually the case in supervised play groups, is pointed out by Miss Eva M. Seen, head of physical education for women at OSC, in a conference paper printed in a recent issue of The Commonwealth Review, issued by the University of Oregon.

Her paper, entitled, "Corecreational Planning," discusses the advantages of mixed recreational activities for boys and girls, and tells how scout leaders, 4-H workers, schools and others can cooperate in planning opportunities for such young folks to play together.

Pointing out that boys and girls of high school age particularly enjoy being together and are interested in many of the same sports, Miss Seen says: "Joint participation in a wide variety of activities and interests at this age provide a better basis for wholesome relations and prepare young men and women for more happiness in marriage. The family that plays together stays together."

OSC Registration Tops Past Records at 4200

Oregon State College—An 8 per cent increase in registration, exceeding the advance estimates of college officials, has raised the enrollment at Oregon State college to an all-time high mark.

By the end of the first week of the fall term, enrollment had reached 4200, as compared with a previous high mark of 4068 at the end of the term last year. As late registration, particularly of graduate students, always continues for several weeks, a final fall term total of 4300 is now expected.

Other record-breaking totals are 1500 in the freshman class, 1400 women students, and 1664 new students in all classes on the campus.

Wallace Advises Processing Tax For Wheat Plan

The present and prospective situation in America and in the world with regard to wheat production is such that continued governmental programs will be necessary, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace told some 1500 wheat farmers gathered at Hutchinson, Kansas, last week in one of the most important "wheat meetings" in years.

To handle and finance such a program Wallace advocated reenactment of some form of processing tax on wheat products in order that the adjustment in wheat acreage could be made self-sustaining without direct appropriation from the federal treasury. Such a self-sustaining program was followed during the first years of the AAA before the plan as drawn was pronounced unconstitutional. It is Wallace's belief that a constitutional program accomplishing the same ends can be enacted by Congress.

The meeting in Kansas also became a forum for criticism of the AAA policy in regard to wheat when one of the leading wheat grower opponents of federal crop regulation was given time for an address. At the conclusion of his speech he asked for an expression of sentiment by vote, but only a scattering few supported his position, according to Oregon delegates attending.

Meanwhile in Oregon the county wheat meetings have now been completed with exceptional interest and attendance in most regions. Most growers attending appeared to be planning to "go along" with the program, despite the extra acreage reduction planned for next year. Most of the questions asked at the meetings concerned what would be needed in the way of compliance and what could be done with the acreage left out of wheat.

On the latter point final definite word could not be given. Certain substitute crops can be used but final use for acreage beyond the total soil depleting base has not been
