LOOKING FORWARD

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN, Publicity Director, Republican National Committee

Just as day is certain to follow night, so President Roosevelt can be expected several weeks before an election to deliver to the country his usual message calling for cooperation between business and government and an end to name-calling. After the election Mr. Roosevelt forgets it. This event has become so much a part of American campaigns in the last six years that future writers on political technique undoubtedly will list it among the things which un-faillingly should be done.

Consequently the only surprising aspect of the President's delivery of the message this year was the fact that he did not choose to do so personally but resurrected from the grave the White House Spokesman to serve as his ambassador. None seems to know exactly why Mr. Roosevelt adopted this medium of communication with the country this year.

Perehaps the humor of what Mr. Roosevelt had to say was, this time, even too much for him and he feared he might not be able to keep a straight face in urging that business come to peace with the government and that labor and industry link arms in sweet harmony.

F. D. R. Champion Name-Caller

Surely, Mr. Roosevelt must realize that whatever shortcomings he may have, he could qualify as the champion name-caller and epithet-hurler among American Presidents. He has easily out-distanced Teddy Roosevelt, who set the previous record. The epithets which Mr. Roosevelt has hurled at business and industry will give a salty tinge to our political histories for many years to come.

Remember some of the gentle references which Mr. Roosevelt has uttered about business! Best known, of course, is the "economic royalist" phrase. But there are others. The first inaugural address is spotted by several which shine like mackerel in the moonlight. For instance there was the "unscrupulous money-changers" and then there was the phrase that the economic structure broken down because "the rulers of the exchange of mankind's goods have failed, through their own stubbornness and their own incompetence." Then in a message to Congress was the boast that "we have earned the hatred of entrenched greed." In the same message "political puppets of an economic autocracy" appeared. Less severe was the phrase at Atlanta: "Gentlemen in well-warmed and well-stocked clubs."

There are a number of others which might be recalled. But these will suffice to show that Mr. Roosevelt does not need to give quarter when it comes to calling names. The thing which gives him complete supremacy in this field is the fact that some of his aides are almost as good as he is.

Ickes' Tongue Sharp

Early in the New Deal it was thought General Hugh S. Johnson had a rapier tongue. But Secretary Harold L. Ickes makes the former army officer's words sound like patter at a tea party. For example, there was this one: "big business should wash in strong disinfectants." Another Ickes phrase which ranks high among epithets reads: "the Bourbons of the sixty families who have brought the rest of the businessmen of the United States under the terror of their domination." The word "plutocracy," of course, is Secretary Ickes' pet name for business and industry.

Solicitor-General Robert H. Jackson added "aristocratic anarchy" to the New Deal list of epithets. He also is the author of "the economic oligarchy of autocratic, self-constituted and self-perpetuating groups" as a description of business. There were others in that speech last December when Mr. Jackson in one night talked himself out of a chance to be governor of New York.

And after all that, Mr. Roosevelt asks business to stop calling names and rattling sabers! No wonder he conveyed the message through the White House Spokesman.

Mr. Roosevelt may now talk about "cooperation" between business and government, but if he runs true to form he will give business another tongue-lashing a few weeks after the election is over. As for cooperation, is it not a two-way proposition? Business and industry have tried again and again to cooperate with the Roosevelt Administration but their efforts seldom have been reciprocated.

The impasse between the White House and the public utilities is a case in point. Men within that industry have on various occasions undertaken to come to an understanding with the White House—have gone far in the concessions they are willing to make. But the White House has yet to meet them halfway. On occasion Mr. Roosevelt has promised cooperation and a cessation of Administration harassment of business, as he did in the famous "breathing spell" letter to Roy Howard. But the promises never materialized.

Perhaps the reason is that the Roosevelt Administration must have a whipping boy to divert attention from its incompetence and failures.

Annual Meeting Set For OSC Dads' Club.

Oregon State College—The Dads' Club of Oregon State college has announced November 5 and 6 as the official weekend this year for their visitation of the campus and annual meeting. Officers of the club deliberately chose a time when there would be no football game, as they want to have more opportunity to visit other features of campus life, says Dr. Paul E. Dutton of Portland, president of the club.

Aside from the opportunity to visit all parts of the campus, the tentative program lists a number of inter-class events for freshmen and sophomores to furnish entertainment. An annual banquet in the Memorial Union building will be held, as will numerous organization affairs, arranged for smaller groups.

The recent marriage of Elliot Newport in Idaho is announced. He arrived with his bride this week.
