

● LOOKING FORWARD

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN, Publicity Director, Republican National Committee

Results of last week's elections have altered completely the American political picture. The New Deal no longer is the dominant power in our lives. The Republican party, electing Senators and Governors in 20 States, has been restored as a numerically strong and effective opposition that must be respected. Thus once again the two-party system in this country has been firmly entrenched. Threats of a third party movement have evaporated like the morning dew under the rising sun. Third term prospects again become only of academic interest.

More important, the county has put its foot down, with crunching sounds, on radicalism, the shameless effort to control elections with relief funds, the flagrant flouting of constitutional forms and experimental paternalism in the field of economic action. All of that has been condemned and that is the real significance of the elections. Those who have feared that America might go the way of Russia, Germany and Italy may now feel reassured.

The long-range significance of what has happened is much clearer than the immediate outlook. Whether the next two years will be a period of political calm and tranquility depends primarily on President Roosevelt. If he reads correctly the lesson of the elections and acts accordingly, he will be saved many hours of grief.

Third New Deal Dead

On the other hand, if Mr. Roosevelt mistakes the meaning of the 1938 elections, as he did the election two years ago, he is destined to meet firm and unrelenting opposition, bitter political warfare and, perhaps, crushing humiliation. For it is certain that what General Hugh S. Johnson calls the "third New Deal" is now dead and past all hope of resurrection.

Mr. Roosevelt must make the choice. It is a particularly difficult decision for him to make. By nature he is a fighting man—much more the leader of the cavalry charge than the philosopher, despite his many efforts in the latter field. The situation confronting Mr. Roosevelt calls, not for the flash of saber or the roll of drums, but quiet, meditative reflection. Thus it goes against his nature.

Secondly, Mr. Roosevelt is convinced of his own good intentions. Perhaps it would be unfair to say that he has a Messianic complex. But it is obvious that he does not believe he ever has been wrong in

Preparing for Active And Useful Life

Young girl, recovering from tuberculosis in a sanatorium, learning typewriting to enable her to earn at least part of her living when she is discharged. Modern medical science not only treats the sick body, but aims toward vocational rehabilitation. These activities, which are aided by Christmas Seals, are resulting in hundreds of men and women returning to useful lives.

any major particular. So far, at least, he has not admitted error. Even in the matter of election forecasting, his post-election announcements must be approximately accurate, though adverse to him. It would have been encouraging, and very human, if Mr. Roosevelt had guessed wrong the outcome of at least this election.

Thirdly, Mr. Roosevelt's closest friends and advisers are the very ones who have led him astray. He cannot reverse what he has been doing—the things which the voters condemned at the polls—without repudiating them. They, too, have become mesmerized with the belief of their infallibility. Their self-confidence and their righteousness overwhelm them. Thus they have immunized themselves against public reaction.

Hopkins Feels Superior

Harry Hopkins is a typical illustration. Long ago Mr. Hopkins decided his judgment was superior to all others in the matter of administering relief. Criticisms of his work were met by contemptuous assertions that the critics were "too dumb to understand." He dismissed the Bacon-Vandenberg substitute bill for relief administration, before reading it, with the assertion that it originated with Republicans and therefore could not have any value.

Whether the results of the elections have jolted Mr. Roosevelt and his advisers remains to be seen. So far there is little evidence to that effect, aside from the general confusion in New Deal ranks. None expects Mr. Roosevelt publicly to mount the repentance bench. There are other ways, however, to make evident a change of heart. Yet the signs are not encouraging to those who desire that change. Instead there was a slight tone of belligerency in the first press conference after the elections—a note of "I am all right if you do not misrepresent me."

Ickes Rushes In

Harry Hopkins has had the good sense to keep his silence. But not the blatant Harold Ickes. He had to rush into print, loudly proclaiming Mr. Roosevelt's policies had been indorsed and that now we must become reconciled to Mr. Roosevelt for another term. This is the same Mr. Roosevelt whose friend and lieutenant Frank Murphy was overwhelmingly crushed by the electorate in Michigan, whose personally-indorsed admirer, Elmer Benson, was driven from public life in Minnesota, whose protege George H. Earle was ignominiously defeated in Pennsylvania, whose home state of New York was saved, after a personal plea by him, from going Republican only by a hair-line margin.

It is no wonder that Henry Wallace—who at least is a little more sensitive to what is happening around him than other New Dealers—gagged over the Ickes' words and broke precedent by publicly rebuking his fellow Cabinet officer. Mr. Wallace's avowed spirit of humility and soul-searching might well be emulated by the other New Dealers—but it is doubtful that it will be for Henry Wallace's influence at the White House in recent months has not been great. Harry Hopkins has seen to that.

As for the Republicans, they choose to regard their victory as an opportunity rather than a personal or party triumph. Having convinced the American people of the deficiencies of the New Deal, they now will turn toward the projection of alternative and constructive programs. Their recent campaign and its satisfactory conclusion is evidence that they are in tune with public sentiment. They are looking forward not only to greater triumphs in 1940 but also to a revitalization of the American way.

OSC LEADER GETS HONOR

Chicago—F. L. Ballard, vice-director of extension in Oregon, was one of 13 extension workers in the entire United States to be awarded regional certificates of recognition for outstanding work in the extension service. The awards were made at the annual meeting of the National Association of Land Grant colleges by Epsilon Sigma Phi, national honorary extension fraternity. Ballard has been with the Oregon extension service since 1917 and has been vice-director in charge of administration since 1934.
