

New Machine May Further Improve Butter Quality

Extensive experimental tests of a new piece of creamery equipment which may lead to still further improvement in the quality of Oregon butter have been started in the Oregon State college creamery, and will be continued for a year. The experimental project is directed by Dr. G. H. Wilster, head of the work in dairy manufacturing in the dairy department of the experiment station.

The new apparatus is called a vacuator, and was developed in New Zealand, where it has been in general use for the past six years. It is described as an ultra-flash vacuum cream pasteurizer, which is said to be capable of more thorough and efficient pasteurization, without danger of harming the delicate flavor of the cream.

F. S. Board of Auckland, New Zealand, one of the inventors of the vacuum process, brought the first machine to America and supervised its installation in the Oregon State college creamery. He believes that the experimental project carried on here will demonstrate thoroughly whether this equipment will be a practicable and profitable addition to the Pacific coast dairy industry.

While the vacuum process is said to eliminate certain undesirable feed flavors from cream, it is not intended to take the place of the best possible present known methods of production and manufacturing, Mr. Board explains. It is intended for use in those creameries that are already doing an excellent job of butter manufacturing by the present processes. He says Oregon has gained a high reputation for the general quality of its butter output.

Board will be one of several visiting speakers at the next annual dairy manufacturing short course at the state college next February. Another will be Dr. C. L. Roadhouse, head of the department of dairy industries at the University of California at Davis. The short course will be from February 13 to February 24. The annual Dairy Products Manufacturers' convention will be February 20 to 24.

McIntosh Honored For 25 Years at OSC

Oregon State College—C. J. McIntosh, professor of industrial editing, has been receiving felicitations this fall on the completion of 25 years of service on the journalism staff at this institution.

McIntosh, one of the two living life members of the Oregon Newspaper Publishers association, came to the college in 1913, after being editor and publisher of the Blue Mountain Eagle at Canyon City. He originated the regular news service to the weekly and daily newspapers of the state, and with the assistance of the late Colin V. Diment of the University of Oregon, started the first classes in journalism at Oregon State. The journalism work has expanded greatly through the years, but has continued as a non-major service department offering train-

CARELESS TURNING BAD

Careless turning is responsible for hundreds of automobile accidents in Oregon every year, and also accounts for several fatalities, Secretary of State Earl Snell said today.

He referred particularly to turning from the wrong lane, turning without signalling, and making reverse turns where visibility is limited.

"The chief factors in turning safely are to make sure that other drivers understand what you intend to do, and to delay the turn until automobiles which have the right of way have proceeded," Snell said.
