

Dates for Wheat Compliance Set For Western AAA

Oregon farmers who may have over-seeded their 1939 wheat acreage allotments may comply with these allotments if they dispose of the excess acreage before December 15, announces N. C. Donaldson, state executive AAA officer. It is believed that the closing date will not affect many Oregon growers, as most of them had their allotment figures in hand before seeding time, but a few who may not have intended to cooperate in the program may have decided since to stay within their allotments. The provision was made principally to help farmers who completed fall seeding before their acreage allotments were finally established.

The wheat acreage on the farm on December 15 or seeded after that date will be the acreage used in determining the eligibility for parity payments, as well as the agricultural conservation payments, explains Mr. Donaldson. For this reason it is especially important that farmers get their acreage into line by that date.

As announced previously, there is no compulsion in regard to cooperation with the program, but only those who stay within the allotments will be eligible for the agricultural conservation payments of 17c a bushel and the parity payments of 10c to 12c a bushel.

Final arrangements are being made in all counties for the election on Wednesday, December 7, when AAA community committeemen will be chosen throughout the state. The plan is being tried this year of having the elections on the same day in all counties and communities. This will be the sixth year that Oregon farmers have held such elections for setting up farmer organizations to administer the local details of the various AAA programs.

New 1939 dockets on the range improvement program show practically no changes from last year, says N. C. Donaldson, state executive officer of the AA. A few minor changes in payment rates have been made, but in general the program remains in all its essential details the same as in 1938. Western range operators have frequently expressed approval of the range improvement program, and they have taken an active part in working out its provisions with the regional and national AAA officials.
