

Two Farmers Now Head of Western Division of AAA

Recent changes in the administrative setup of the agricultural adjustment administration have put two farmers, one of them from Oregon, in charge of the western division of the AAA.

C. C. Conser of Montana has just been promoted to director of the western division succeeding George E. Farrell. Since Farrell's transfer to another division of the department of agriculture, Conser has been acting director. N. E. Dodd of Haines, Ore., is the new assistant director, filling the place formerly occupied by Conser.

Conser, before entering AAA work in 1933, had been a farmer in eastern Montana for 23 years. He is particularly familiar with the wheat growers' problems and has been in Oregon a number of times to confer with leaders here on the wheat program.

Dodd, who owns and operates a stock farm in Baker county, has also been active in the AAA program in this state since 1933, when he was on the Baker county committee for both the wheat and corn-hog programs which started that year. When Oregon had difficulty in adjusting its hog quota, Dodd took an active part in the controversy and was finally placed on a state board of review, which succeeded in bringing about an agreement.

With the inauguration of the new soil conservation and domestic allotment act in 1936, Dodd was placed on the first Oregon AAA committee, where he has served as chairman ever since. He was called to Washington frequently to confer in regard to national and regional programs, and was recognized by national officials as one of the keenest and most practical students of the farm situation.

Dodd began his business life in Oregon as a pharmacist and operated drug stores in several eastern Oregon cities before entering the livestock business as a buyer, covering the states of Montana, Idaho and Oregon. He later acquired land of his own, on which he has conducted extensive livestock feeding operations. His familiarity with the livestock industry resulted in his taking a major part in formulating the present range improvement program of the AAA, which has proved so popular among western livestock men.

Chancellor and President Join In KOAC Appeal

Oregon State College—If the great state-owned radio service agency, KOAC, is lost now through encroachment of commercial interests from another state, it probably will never be regained in its present efficiency, Chancellor F. M. Hunter, head of the state system of higher education, warned in adding his support to the intensive drive to inform the Oregon congressional delegation of the desires of Oregon people in respect to KOAC.

Senator McNary had informed Chancellor Hunter that he had been asked by the chairman of the Federal Communications commission to prepare a report bearing on the application of KOY to use the KOAC wavelength, and that he was using for this purpose the communications he was receiving from his own constituents. Hunter emphasized the fact that the state board has the interests of 65,000 Oregon farm families in mind primarily in maintaining the station, although it serves urban audiences as well.

President G. W. Peavy added his endorsement to the campaign, saying KOAC is a vital factor in keeping the people informed in the far-flung activities of the state college, particularly in the field of agricultural research and extension. KOAC must be preserved to serve the people of Oregon, he declared.

Henry Baker, in the city yesterday from Gooseberry, said the wheat in his district appeared to be okeh and that the ground was in good condition to receive a heavy snow.

Advance Shown in Higher Education Service to State

The state-wide service rendered over the past two years by the six institutions under the direction of the Oregon state system of higher education is emphasized by Chancellor F. M. Hunter in his biennial report, just submitted to the board and through it to the governor and legislature.

Chancellor Hunter develops the following five facts in his report: "1. Unification among the institutions of the state system of higher education has made definite progress. 2. Unprecedented growth has come to the institutions comprising the system. 3. Notable improvement has been made in instruction and service. 4. The cost, both in the aggregate and per student, has been relatively low. 5. The trend of administrative costs has been relatively downward.

The teaching of youth is the major responsibility of any system of higher education, the report points out, and in the last two years the institutions have cared for the largest enrollments in history. In 1938 enrollment exceeded the pre-depression peak by 1609 students, or 17 per cent. The increase over 1933 enrollment was 4140 students, or 61 per cent.

At least half of the budget for the state institutions of higher learning is now spent for the purpose of increasing the earning power of individuals and developing the resources of the state. Of this sum, approximately $450,000 annually is spent for the improvement of production. Emphasis is placed in the report on the direct service to the agricultural industry by Oregon State college, which is described as "without doubt the most signal service institution in the northwest in the development of the resources of this area."

The service work of the University of Oregon, through the bureau of municipal research and through its relationship to organized journalism, is also emphasized, as is the great volume of service to the indigent sick by the University of Oregon medical school. The biennium also marked the return of the normal schools toward an era of increased usefulness and success.

The report contains complete financial summaries of expenditures over the past two years and the askings for the next two years. If the budget is granted as requested, the entire appropriations for the next biennium will still be 4 1/2 per cent below those of 1929-1930, when combined enrollments were 17 per cent smaller.

Plan Kitchen for Use, Says OSC Specialist

The first consideration in planning a kitchen for a Willamette valley farm house is the needs and habits of the family using it, points out Miss Maud Wilson, OSC home economist, in a recent bulletin entitled "The Willamette Valley Farm Kitchen." Whether any or all meals are eaten in the kitchen, whether there are small children who play in the kitchen, whether laundering, ironing, canning and similar work is done in the kitchen and similar factors all affect the size and arrangement of this important room.

In planning the storage space, Miss Wilson explains that the method of storage, whether it be in bins, drawers or shelves, should be suited to the shape, size, weight and character of the material to be stored.

Each kitchen has several activity "centers." The sink center, for instance, includes the sink itself, drain boards, space for handling soiled dishes, as well as foods that require washing, and space for the garbage container and kitchen stool. The stove center includes the stove and also adjacent unheated surface where short mixing jobs can be done, as well as space for fuel, food supplies and equipment most often used at the stove. The mixing center provides a surface of the proper height for preparing bread, pastry, etc., space for meat and pastry boards, and other supplies and equipment usually used there.

The serving center provides a surface for bread cutting, filling dishes for the table, as well as containers for bread, cakes, cookies, bread cutting board, dishes and other utensils and supplies that may be needed there. The dining center will have a table and chairs, a nearby surface for placing trays, and storage for silver and linen, electrical appliances used at meal times, and articles such as salt shakers and sugar bowl that do not require washing or filling after each meal.

Another desirable arrangement is the planning center, including a table or desk for writing, shelves for books, files and drawers for paper. Space for a draft cooler is needed, as well as for a refrigerator, if one is used.

The bulletin and other aids to farm home planning may be had free from any extension office.

David Hynd, in the city yesterday from Roselawn ranch, Sand Hollow, said range conditions were fine and stock doing well.

Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Furlong were in the city Monday and Tuesday from Condon. They announce that they are well pleased with the reception given their management of the Liberty theater there which they recently assumed.

Lee Beckner was in town Tuesday from the ranch in the Ione section, calling on Mrs. Beckner at the hospital. Mrs. Beckner entered the hospital on Wednesday last week for treatment for a severe cold.

The Guy Huston family were visiting in the city yesterday from the Eight Mile farm.

Eino Simila of Boardman was transacting business here Tuesday.
