Conservation, Canadian Meets Subject of Wheatmen's Meet

Pendleton—One of the largest mass meetings of wheat growers and general farmers in many years is expected here next Saturday, February 11, when R. M. "Spike" Evans, administrator of the AAA, is scheduled to make his first visit and first address in this state since his recent appointment as head of the farm program.

Evans will be accompanied on this brief western tour by N. E. Dodd, Haines, former state committee chairman for Oregon and now assistant director of the western division of the AAA. Before reaching Pendleton Evans will have given only three other addresses on the tour, one each in North Dakota, Montana and Spokane, Wash. The meeting here will open at 2 o'clock.

The situation confronting wheat growers will be the chief topic of discussion at the meeting, although other matters concerning the agricultural conservation program will be touched upon. Evans has just returned from attending a wheat conference in Canada at which world wheat problems were considered.

Besides presenting the results of the Canadian conference Evans will take up matters of export possibilities, wheat marketing quotas, process taxes and other means of financing the agricultural program. Possible nature of the 1940 program will also be touched upon.

The meeting here will also afford Oregon growers the first opportunity to hear a report from their representative to the recent wheat conference in Washington, D. C. Sim Culley, Weston, will make such a report just before Evans speaks, says N. C. Donaldson, state executive officer for Oregon, who will come from Corvallis to help the Oregon state committee handle the meeting.

Members of the state committee and many county committees are to be here for the meeting and will hold a separate meeting with the Washington visitors after the main program is finished.

FACTORY OFFICIALS VISIT

than that asked by unions and the most pleasant working conditions possible attain. A company esprit de corps has thus been obtained in which the speakers reflected pride.

Local people were given liberty to ask any questions, which were answered. In his business experience, Mr. Leash vouchsafed, he had never sued nor had never been sued in court. His company has always discounted its bills and has paid its way wherever it went. He said they were not asking Heppner for any financial assistance though they would not refuse to accept the site offered. His pleasure at seeing the sympathetic interest of the community as expressed at the meeting was evident.

The officials remained in the city Tuesday on business in connection with clearing timberlands which they are purchasing.

Production and Marketing Twins Says Schoenfeld

No one can say accurately where production service ends and marketing service begins, hence the most effective service in improving the marketing of Oregon's farm products can be provided through the very men involved in serving production activities. Such is the opinion expressed by Wm. A. Schoenfeld, dean and director of agriculture at Oregon State college, in an address before the annual convention of the Oregon Dairymen's association in Eugene.

Dean Schoenfeld reviewed the marketing service of the college to agriculture over the past 25 years and pointed out that this service had been constantly coordinated with the efforts of other leadership in the field of agriculture and the individual enterprises themselves.

"Oregon among the states has the oldest continuous service to cooperatives," Schoenfeld pointed out. "It is now in its twenty-fifth year. The state has upwards of 200 agricultural cooperative associations serving 42,000 farms doing an annual business of approximately 44 million dollars."

The dean pointed out that one feature of the 4 1/2 million dollar small seed industry in Oregon has been the development of the Blue Mt. Seed Growers cooperative at La Grande, which in three years has become the largest marketer of crested wheat grass seed in this country and one of the largest handlers of alfalfa seed.

The speaker referred to the specialized marketing unit at the state college headed by Paul Carpenter, which provides service in marketing organization, transportation, marketing finance and related work. This unit, he says, is very much undermanned.

After reviewing the marketing accomplishments in the fields of dairying, grain growing, horticulture, food industries, market news service and others, Dean Schoenfeld said that under the present organization all production specialists work closely with the marketing specialist, and in fact are "in marketing with both feet all the time."

"I believe any expansion of marketing service should rest firmly upon the foundation already laid and similar methods should be used," he concluded.

$6000 Paid Jobless, Morrow and Umatilla

Salem, Feb. 7.—Insured unemployed workers in Umatilla and Morrow counties received $6112.83 from the state unemployment compensation commission during January. This was 2 per cent of the state total of $506,035, officials said.

Distribution of benefit checks and comparison of the claim load and new applications for jobs reflects the general improvement in Oregon employment conditions over January, 1938, it was pointed out.

The state total for benefit checks during the month was less than the amount disbursed last June and but slightly more than totals for July and August, during which seasonal conditions for work in Oregon are near the peak.

Aggregate new, original and continued claims handled by the Pendleton office fell off during the month and new applications for jobs are only 40 per cent as numerous as last year at this time, analysis of commission records shows.
