

Community Auction To Provide New Market Outlet

Local Men Set Opening Thursday For Weekly Event

Answering what they say is a wide-spread demand, Jack Osier and V. R. Runion are starting a weekly auction sale next Thursday at the Osier farm just south of Heppner, the former Jim Gentry farm. Called for 1:30 in the afternoon, the sale will place through the ring cattle, horses and hogs of all kinds, already listed, as well as a number of used automobiles.

The sponsors invite anyone to bring anything which they wish to have sold, and list it before 10 o'clock in the morning of the day of the sale. While they are going to considerable expense to set up the sale as a private business venture, charging commission on goods put through the sale ring, Osier and Runion believe they are creating a new market for items which before have not been readily marketable, and thus are setting up a service of general community benefit.

Osier, who will manage the sale, is a recent newcomer to the county. Having taken over the Gentry farm, he has prepared facilities for handling livestock and all other goods offered for sale, expecting to make the sale a permanent feature.

Runion is well known locally for his auctioneering ability, and has had much experience in conducting community auction sales. He staged a number of these sales in Grant county last year, all of which he reported were highly successful. Community auctions, he points out, are an established feature all over the country, helping to provide an outlet for small amounts of surplus stock and equipment of both town and country. In many instances the sales have been the foundation for establishment of a permanent livestock market, for as the number of animals offered increased, outside buyers were attracted who assisted in raising the local market price.

As people here become better acquainted with the idea of community auction, they will avail themselves more and more of its advantages, Runion says. This has been the history elsewhere, and he is satisfied from the demand already evidenced that Morrow county will appreciate the service.

In many places, merchants of the city have joined forces with the community auction, offering special sales inducements and entertainment to show appreciation for the additional cash income which the auction makes possible, he said. Many Heppner merchants have evidenced willingness to cooperate but so far proper organization has not been perfected to carry this feature to fruition.

E. Harvey Miller has been retained as clerk of the sale. Details of sales conditions will be found in the advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

streams that feed the lower, unwooded valleys, providing water for irrigation and for turning the turbines that in turn make electrical power for industries, as well as for many domestic purposes.

Carl Ewing, Umatilla Forest supervisor from Pendleton, was also a club guest. He said that Heppner people should demand that the forest resources behind the city be not dissipated to the end that future welfare of the community be protected. A small industry that will be enabled to run indefinitely is of infinitely more value to any town than a large industry that goes strong for a few years, then ceases, leaving only desolation in its wake. He said he was glad to hear the new operation at Heppner was planning to cut according to forest service regulations.

J. Logie Richardson, who had just arrived from Portland and a conference with the proposed box factory officials, told the Lions group the officials had released word that

In a press dispatch yesterday, Dr. David Seabury, psychologist and lecturer, was quoted as saying that neurosis has increased about 60 per cent and insanity 30 per cent in the last ten years. He concluded that within 200 years few would be sane. Modern people are trying to live too fast. They must learn the value of worship, meditation and prayer. Men need the "peace that passeth understanding" of which the apostle Paul spoke. Come and worship Sunday morning.

Frank Alfred reported progress of the legislation protecting Morrow county's interests in the Ditch creek ditch, which he said was then in senate committee. He reported assurance that the bill would pass the senate, and urged more letters be written to help save it in the house of representatives against the pressure of last-minute major legislation that might cause it to be pigeon-holed.
