- Long Session
- Milk Control
- Kansas Plan

By A. L. LINDBECK

Salem—The present session of the Oregon legislature now threatens to establish a new record for longevity. To date that record is held by the session of 1933 which adjourned on the 60th day. Hope of terminating the present session on or before March 4 (next Saturday) was practically abandoned by legislative leaders when they recessed for the week-end with much of its major problems still uncompleted. If the session continues until Thursday of next week, as now seems probable, it will have equalled the record of 1933. If it continues past that date it will have hung up a new record for endurance.

The session also gives promise of establishing a new record for the number of bills introduced. Already the senate is ahead of its bill record of two years ago while the House was almost up to the 1937 record with each day finding a grist of new measures being ground out by the lawmakers.

Whatever the fate of the milk control act at the hands of the legislators at this session residents of the smaller communities throughout Oregon are to be relieved of further interference by the milk board with the distribution of their milk supply. A bill by Representative French of Sherman county covering this subject has been approved by both House and Senate and is now in the hands of Governor Sprague.

The milk control act, passed by the special session of 1935, has been the subject of bitter controversy ever since. Attempts to repeal the act were made in the session of 1937 and renewed in the early days of this session. Bottled up in the senate committee on agriculture for six weeks the measure was finally brought out last week with a majority of the committee recommending against passage of the repeal bill. Friends of the bill, however, succeeded in mustering 15 votes to save the measure temporarily from indefinite postponement and were said to have the requisite 16 votes necessary to its passage on Friday when two of their supporters threw a monkey wrench into the machinery by disappearing from the senate, necessitating a postponement of the battle that is expected to provide a real test of strength with respect to the attitude of the lawmakers toward this highly controversial bit of legislation.

Special requests for state appropriations not included in the regular budget aggregate more than $1,440,000. Most of these have already been disapproved by the ways and means committee which is attempting to confine appropriations to available revenues in line with Governor Sprague's insistence that no new taxes be imposed by this session.

The proposal by the Association of County Judges and Commissioners that the old market road tax of one mill be restored has been definitely rejected by the legislature, the House voting to indefinitely postpone the measure after the taxation and revenue committee had reported it out with a "do not pass" recommendation on the ground that it was "just another tax."

Legislators and newspaper men covering the session were guests of the Order of Antelope at a luncheon at the Salem armory Saturday night. The Order of Antelope, incidentally, is an organization comprising some of Oregon's most prominent citizens, formed several years ago for the purpose of creating a great wilderness park on Hart mountain in Lake county for the preservation of antelope and other wild life.

Oregon voters will go to the polls in September instead of May to pick their candidates for public office if the House follows the lead of the senate which this week passed the September primary bill by a vote of 19 to 9. Sponsors of the measure urged its passage as a measure of relief for both the candidates and the electorate inasmuch as it will materially shorten the political campaign. Governor Sprague has endorsed the measure and urged its passage.

Negotiations for a state office building in Portland will be discontinued for the time being. Under an act passed by the session of 1937 the board of control conducted extensive negotiations with owners of a number of Portland office buildings in an effort to acquire one of them for use by state departments quartered in the metropolis. After conferring with the board the ways and means committee has recommended that the act be repealed and that no effort be made to acquire a building in Portland for the time being.

Clarence M. Ryerson, for the past 25 years editor of the Oregon Labor Press, is to succeed J. C. Joy as labor's representative on the Industrial Accident commission on March 15, according to apparently reliable but as yet unconfirmed rumors about the capitol. Joy, a Democrat, was appointed by Governor Martin in 1936. This change, it is believed, will be the first among many which Governor Sprague will make in his official family although he is expected to wait until after he has cleared his desk of the legislative grist before beginning the task of reorganizing state departments and commissions.

The House put the finishing touch to the state bakery board Friday when it passed a bill abolishing the board by a vote of 36 to 23. The senate had previously passed the measure which is now in the hands of Governor Sprague who recommended such legislation in his inaugural address.

The services of the state police have been called for in an effort to put a stop to acts of vandalism in the new capitol. Souvenir hunters continue to carry away anything they can lay their hands on in spite of vigilance of janitors and other employees on duty about the building.

The so-called Kansas plan is now before the legislators in a measure introduced this week by Senator Harry Kenin of Multnomah county. The plan calls for the creation of an interim commission composed of senators and representatives who would meet at stated periods to consider proposed legislation. Suggestions considered by this commission as worthy of further consideration by the legislature would be turned over to a research department which would gather all information available on the subject for the information and guidance of the lawmakers. The plan is designed to expedite action on important legislation and to materially shorten legislative sessions by weeding out trivial and unworthy proposals before the session convenes.

A bill sponsored by Senator Ross of Washington county which would have required county courts to advertise for bids on all purchases in excess of 500 was defeated in the senate. Ross claimed the measure would result in great savings to the counties and put a stop to the practice of favoritism in placing county business. Opponents of the measure contended that it would only result in increased expense with no resulting economies. County courts over the state generally were said to be opposed to the bill.

"Joe College" in Reverse Shown in Campus Incident

Oregon State College—This is a story of "Joe College" as he is not usually pictured on the screen or in campus fiction.

Some six years ago there came to OSC a tall young cshap with plenty of ambition and determination but with little cash. Brought up in a "well-to-do" home, he had seen his father's business wiped out in the early days of the depression. Soon afterwards his father died.

With a high school education but no job or special training, the boy decided to try a college course. He came to Corvallis, enrolled in engineering, and reported to the college employment office for work.

Things did not go smoothly despite his best efforts. The course was hard, jobs were scarce as well as difficult for one reared as he had been, while board and room costs soon used up most of his slender savings.

Before it was too late he switched to batching quarters and began cooking his own meals, but he had never cooked before. Mrs. Lulu Howard, who has been employment secretary for so long she can almost read students at a glance, saw signs of undernourishment as time went on. From a modest store of food supplies donated by women's organizations for just such emergencies, she tactfully supplemented his menu, even though he protested that he was "getting along all right."

As term followed term he mastered his course, stood well in his class, but faced a continual struggle for finances. As a last resort he accepted a small loan from an emergency fund handled by Mrs. Howard on a character basis without interest. Each loan was repaid promptly, even though he might have to return later for another.

In his senior year he obtained work with the college which eased the way a bit, and he got his coveted sheepskin at the end of his fifth year. After commencement Mrs. Howard had a caller—merely to say goodbye, she presumed, as his little loans had been all paid. Instead he handed her a check, saying it was a little appreciation gift for her emergency fund. It was his last check from the college and was for $37.80. Her protests were unavailing and the gift remained.

He is now well established in a government engineering service. At Christmas time another $10 check came from the fund to help some present day "Joe College"—the kind seldom heard about on the screen or in campus fiction.

Information to Cut Accidents

Efforts to reach elderly pedestrians in Oregon with information about traffic accidents are being counted upon to reduce the traffic toll which automobiles have long taken among this group, Secretary of State Earl Snell said today.

In Portland, Captain W. C. Epps of the police traffic department has appealed to the city's clergymen to devote at least one Sunday sermon to the subject of pedestrian safety, in view of the fact that seven of the city's 12 traffic deaths since January 1st have involved pedestrians over the age of 55.

Secretary Snell's office is also planning to cooperate with interested groups in disseminating detailed information about pedestrian accidents involving older persons, and it is hoped that the campaign can be broadened to nationwide proportions.

Grange Lecturers Plan School

Oregon State College—Close to 100 grange lecturers from throughout the state are expected to attend a grange lecturers' school here on March 8 to 10, reports Mrs. G. W. Thiessen of Milwaukie, state grange lecturer. Assisting Mrs. Thiessen and members of the extension service and college staff in holding the school will be the state lecturers of Washington, Idaho and California. About 24 successful lecturers from local Oregon granges will also take part in the program.
