- Wide Open Spaces
Herman Oliver
Parole Head

By A. L. LINDBECK

Salem—To the average resident of Oregon, those whose acquaintance with the state is confined to that region lying west of the Cascades the expression "wide open spaces" is just a nice sounding phrase...

The trip of the land board was anything but a pleasure junket although its monotonous hours of driving through mile after mile of dusty sage-covered grazing land was not entirely devoid of pleasant incidents...

Paul R. Kelly of Lafayette automatically became chairman of the new parole board this week when in allotting the appointments Governor Sprague gave him the short two-year term...

Bound files of the Salem Capital-Journal covering the first 40 years of that newspaper's existence, have been presented to the state library by its publisher, George Putnam...

One hundred and two law school graduates have filed their applications for permission to take the examination for admission to the Oregon bar. The examinations will be held in Salem July 11 and 12.

Attorney General Van Winkle has been asked to clarify the new parole law with respect to its application to men and women under sentence at the time the law becomes operative...

ton for lunch, then a long hop to Arlington and a detour by way of Condon, thence through the Cottonwood canyon into Sherman county and on into The Dalles for a very late dinner...

Information gathered by the land board on the trip will be used in determining the board's policy with respect to the sale or leasing of school lands, the revenue from which goes into the irrevocable school fund for the support of Oregon's public schools.

The next change on the State Highway commission awaits the pleasure of Herman Oliver, Grant county rancher and John Day banker. Governor Sprague, shortly after taking office, let it be known that Oliver would be named to succeed E. B. Aldrich on the commission...
