Necrotic hepatitis of Oregon sheep.
This is not a new disease in Oregon but one for which the cause has not heretofore been known. An anaerobic bacterium identical with one found by Montana workers and also appearing in England has been definitely established as the cause of this disease, which is definitely associated with fluke infestation. No satisfactory methods of treatment have been found, although considerable success has been achieved in protecting sheep against it by use of anti-toxin or toxoid. The new publication is station bulletin No. 360.
