Good Increase Seen In OSC Summer Term

A substantial increase in the enrollment for the first and second summer sessions at Oregon State college over the total registration of 881 for the two sessions last year is indicated by inquiries received by Dr. M. Elwood Smith, director. The first six-week session is from June 19 to July 28 and the second period from July 31 to September 1.

Class periods will be lengthened in the second session so that a student may earn 9 term hours, as in the first session, making a total of 18 term hours for the summer.

A total of 226 courses will be offered in 33 departments in the first session and 52 courses in 12 departments in the second session. A notable group of visiting instructors will supplement the regular summer staff.

The two-week intensive course for athletic coaches will be offered in football, basketball, baseball, track and field and training and conditioning at OSC from June 19 to 30. A six-week geology field course in central Oregon will be held for advanced and graduate students in geology while advanced field work in zoology and botany will be offered at the Institute of Marine Biology at Coos Head June 12 to July 21.

FOXES CAUSING DAMAGE

GOLD BEACH — Black foxes which have escaped from fur farms have been causing considerable damage early this spring in the north end of Curry county, reports County Agent R. M. Knox. Although raised in captivity the foxes knew their way around well enough so that 15 lambs were killed on one farm. Agents of the biological survey were called in to attempt to trap the animals. One fox was run down with dogs and killed by farmers, after which loss was stopped in that vicinity.
