OLD CAPITOL GONE

(State Capital Press Bureau)

The old Oregon capitol building is no more.

The last traces disappeared this week when workmen pulled down the brick chimney which was a part of the east wall of the old building.

The chimney was left standing as a part of the heating plant, which served to warm the building until only recently when the new $115,000 heating plant two blocks away was put into service.

The new state capitol building will be open on Sundays during the summer months for the convenience of out-of-town visitors wishing to inspect it. The announcement was made by Secretary of State Earl Snell after many organizations had pleaded for the "open house." Visiting hours will be from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.

Price Levels On Farm Production Similar to 1938

With the general farm price level steady to firm at about the same average level as a year ago and farm costs generally slightly lower, the principal difference in the current agricultural situation compared with last year is in crop prospects, according to information contained in the latest monthly review of economic conditions as they pertain to agriculture just released by the agricultural extension service at OSC.

Government information as of June 1 covering all crops in the nation as a whole indicated a total output 7 per cent less than last year. The drought in the western part of the United States was relieved by rains late in May and in June, and extra favorable weather could still result in a general level of crop production equal to the usual output in the country as a whole, of course, although it is fairly certain that some early crops will be short.

Prospects for the hay crops, farm pastures, and for barley and oats on June 1 were lower than in any season of record since 1934, and western ranges were the poorest of record except 1934 and 1937. On the other hand, the carry-over of feed grain and hay is fairly large in much of the country. Yields of corn and some other late crops have not yet been estimated.

United States and world wheat crops will be smaller, but the carry-over is large enough to offset the expected reduction in production this year. The United States rye crop is also much smaller than last year and below average.

Prospects for fruit and nut crops were generally favorable on June 1. The pear crop was expected to be only slightly less than last year. Apples were reported above average condition in the central and eastern states and slightly below average in the west. The California prune crop is expected to be smaller than last year, but prospects are favorable in the Pacific northwest.

The Oregon index of the general level of farm prices and the United States index both stood at 64 per cent of the 1926-1930 average as of May 15, according to data given in the extension service report. Compared with a year previous, the Oregon index was up two points while the United States index was down one. The report, which is available from county agents, contains several tables of data on farm prices, costs, and demand factors, and other current and comparative information.

367 NEW LAWS

(State Capital Press Bureau)

Oregon now has 367 new laws which it did not have before June 14. On that date all the laws passed by the 1939 legislature except those carrying emergency clauses went into effect, 90 days after adjournment.

Silliest new law was one forbidding the catching of female crawfish, or male crawfish under 2 1/2 inches in length. The law does not explain how to determine the sex of "crawdads."
