Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Barlow and family motored to Portland last Friday, taking Mrs. Barlow's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Akers, to their home in the city following a visit here. On the way they stopped at Timberline lodge on Mt. Hood and Mr. Barlow and Mr. Akers took about a mile and a half jaunt up beyond to view the old mountain in its nuddest condition of record. A picture taken by Mr. Barlow shows the majestic peak almost devoid of snow as seen from the south exposure.

John Maidment and son, John, Jr., were in town yesterday from the Long Creek ranch, bringing in lambs for shipment from the local yards. They came through by way of Tupper corrals where the lambs were on summer range. Mr. Maidment reported ranges drying up fast and water becoming scarce. The creek at his place was dry for the first time in years, he said.

Mr. and Mrs. George Schwartz passed through town yesterday from their home in Portland to Ritter springs where Mr. Schwartz expected to take treatment for his health. They also expected to visit Mrs. Schwartz's son, Reid Buseick, and family at Long Creek, and to get their first view of the new grandson, John Buseick, born in June.

Charles Stanton and George Harrison, both former farmers in the Eight Mile district, were callers in the city Tuesday, leaving for their homes at Walla Walla yesterday. Mr. Harrison farmed the old Stanton place in Eight Mile for several years before leaving here some 25 years ago. Both enjoyed greeting old time friends.

W. W. Riley of Pierce, Neb., is visiting at the home of his niece, Mrs. George Peck, in Clarks canyon. He brings word that extremely hot weather at the wrong time wrought havoc with the corn crop in that section. He was in town this morning with Mr. Peck.

Mrs. Edith Earle of Eugene and Mrs. Kate White of Los Angeles arrived in the city Monday for a visit at the home of their cousin, Mrs. Leta Babb. They drove that day from Mrs. Earle's summer home on the McKenzie river.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Helms were visitors in the city Saturday from Butter creek. Mrs. Helms, formerly Miss Beulah Barker, taught school here a good many years ago and enjoyed renewing acquaintances while in the city.

Word from Norbert Peavy states that he will finish his summer school work at Stanford about the 20th and join the family at Corvallis for a short vacation before coming to Heppner for the start of the school year.

Wheat-Livestock Bulletin Issued By Oregon State

A larger portion of the Pacific northwest annual 40 million bushel wheat surplus can be marketed advantageously by using it for fattening livestock, is the belief of E. L. Potter, head of the division of agricultural economics, and H. A. Lindgren, extension animal husbandman at Oregon State college. Possibilities of such use of part of the wheat surplus are discussed in a bulletin by these men, just off the press and entitled, "Marketing the Surplus Wheat of the Pacific Northwest Through Livestock."

Suitability of wheat as a grain for livestock fattening whether for hogs, sheep or cattle is no longer a question. When properly handled it is just as good, pound for pound, as so-called feed grains, according to results of experimental feeding in Oregon and of commercial feeding by certain eastern Oregon growers.

Thousands of head of cattle and sheep now go to feed lots farther east for finishing for market. Hog production along the Pacific coast has long been on a deficit basis resulting in large imports of pork. When there was an adequate outlet for Pacific northwest wheat at fair prices, this procedure was economically sound in the main, according to the authors of the new bulletin. At present, however, it is believed that with wheat prices on a basis comparable to the price of other feed grains, a substantial increase in hog production, as well as increased feeding of sheep and cattle, is in order.

Statisticians have found that if the entire wheat surplus of the Pacific northwest were fed to hogs, it would produce just about the number now being shipped in to the Pacific coast trading area from the corn belt. This would result in placing Portland hog prices around 35c under Chicago prices, rather than the average of 38c higher that has been obtained since 1930. Of course, no one expects the entire surplus to be fed to hogs, while a gradual increase would not be expected to make this much change.

The bulletin is replete with facts and figures on the changing situation with respect to wheat surplus and livestock feeding for the consideration of Oregon growers. It may be obtained free from county agents or direct from the college.
