OSC Co-eds to Have Colorful Rooms in Hall

Oregon State College—Co-eds returning to Waldo hall this fall may hardly know the place as the result of a thorough redecorating job now under way. Not since this venerable old dormitory was built in 1907 has it undergone such renovating and modernizing.
In connection with rewiring the hall, the state board of higher education recently authorized complete redecorating including alterations in the big dining hall to make it more usable and attractive.
Study rooms are all being refinished in various attractive colors rather than being uniform throughout. More color is also being added to corridors and to the parlors.
Waldo hall is considered one of the most attractive and substantial structures on the campus, and with the interior changes now being made will be ready for many more years of service, say campus officials.

Septic Tank Construction Simple

Detailed plans and specifications for building a concrete septic tank for the farm are contained in a new mimeographed extension circular, No. 333, entitled "A Concrete Septic Tank for the Farm." In this circular Everett H. Davis, extension specialist in agricultural engineering, points out that construction of a concrete septic tank and draining system is neither difficult nor expensive, and that such a tank, if properly constructed, will give satisfactory service for many years.
G. Simbaugh, inspector for the state bureau of labor, was in the city the end of the week inspecting local furnaces.
