DEER PLENTIFUL SAYS RANGER, WHO ASKS SPORTSMEN LIVE UP TO NAME

By F. F. WEHMEYER, Forest Ranger

Another hunting season is with us. It should be a very successful one to the sportsmen as deer have been noted the past spring and summer in larger number than previous years.

Each year more people avail themselves of the recreational outlet in an annual fall hunt and most get a real thrill from just hiking and camping even if they are among the disappointed group who fail to make a kill. It is estimated that only one in four hunters are among the successful. To be successful of course depends on several factors, skill with a rifle, length of time given to hunting, familiarity with habits of big game and last but not least—Lady Luck.

If you get a deer you will find the average weights in this locality are 108 lbs. for a two-pointer, 149 lbs. for a three-pointer, 185 lbs. for a four-pointer and 216 lbs. for five-pointers. I have heard that mule tail deer have been known to weigh five or six hundred pounds. I don't know how authentic this is, but personally suspicion that the party who killed such an animal killed a mule and not a mule deer.

Lots of jokes are fabricated from the material made up from the antics of the careless hunter. In reality it is no joke and there are entirely too many of that class of varmints at large. Accidents happen and always will, otherwise there would be few of us here, but most hunting accidents, at least, are preventable.

Sometimes when we have a series of fires or note where some one has used a government signboard for target practice or an especially dirty camp, we indulge in thoughts that would set fire to an asbestos blanket, however, the great majority of sportsmen live up to the name. The small number who get pleasure from acts of vandalism or who enjoy camping at a spot a few days and leaving it in vile condition from unburied garbage, tin cans, paper, empty bottles, body waste, old and discarded clothes are becoming fewer with the passing of each year. It is hoped that the last specimen can be stuffed and sent back to the Smithsonian Institution before many more years have passed.

Red hats and jackets are a good precaution and should be worn by everyone entering the woods regardless of whether they are hunting or not, during the hunting season. A strip of bright red cloth around the hat if nothing else. For the benefit of the neophyte, I can vouch for the fact that deer do not wear red hats or have not to my knowledge during the past forty years.

While all kills should be promptly bled and dressed, don't lay your gun down and rush up to cut your game's throat. I know a party who did that and had his hip pockets filled with snot from an infuriated buck in the first hundred yards. A wounded deer can be no mean antagonist. Sharp horns and they can do things as surprising with their feet as a Parisian Apache.

Through some quirk of our laws a hide from a legally killed deer is not a legal article. It just sort of has to be bootlegged from raw state to a pair of buckskin gloves. Thousands of hides are wasted annually in Oregon. Seems like questionable conservation. Why can't they be stamped or branded in some manner and placed openly on the market?

Well, here's luck to each hunter visiting the forest this year and hopes that there is a gun-getter for each.

New Provision for Small Wheat Planters

The 1940 agricultural conservation program will permit any farm with a wheat acreage allotment to be designated as a "non-allotment" farm if operators wish, said announcement this week by Will Steen of Milton, chairman of the state AAA committee.

Such farms will not be eligible for 1940 price adjustment payments, conservation wheat payments or wheat loans but may grow the usual acreage of wheat for grain, or 10 acres, whichever is larger, and still participate in other AAA benefits. This provision is intended to simplify the operation of the program and make it more flexible, particularly with respect to those farms on which wheat is used for hay or cover crops.

Steen announced that farmers would be requested to choose their own classification by signing a wheat plan participation form before October 30. He emphasized that farmers who failed to sign this form before October 30 would not be eligible for the 1940 price adjustment payment.
