Irrigon Folks Turn Backs on Depression

Some people may think that the old spirit of individual enterprise is dead in America, that all there is to look forward to is social security provided by a paternalistic government, but Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Suddarth of Irrigon can't be classed with that group.

Illness, poor markets and other ills of the depression have been the lot of the Suddarths and had they been less energetic and determined to fight their way through they might have been included in the list of failures that has characterized American agriculture these past few years.

During the present hatching season the Suddarth hatchery has turned off 40,000 chicks. Much of this turnover has been custom hatching, although they have hatched and sold many of their own breed, New Hampshire Reds.

Prior to the advent of electricity on the project hatching was practiced in a limited way. With the coming of the current new equipment has been installed, including an 1800-egg capacity Jamesway incubator and a five-unit Jamesway brooder.

What has been said for the Suddarths may also be said for other farmers on the north Morrow county projects who, while not operating hatcheries, have found poultry raising beneficial in combatting adverse conditions.

HARRY MORGAN VISITS

Back in the early teens, Harry Morgan was a member of Hepppner high school's good athletic teams. With Jess and Sam Turner, Art Crawford, Jim Yeager, Bob Young and Harold Cohn he helped beat the state basketball championship contenders from Parkdale high school of Hood River county when they invaded the local Commercial Club floor. It was a two-night series and Hepppner came out on top each night. He also was a stalwart on the football team of 1912 that had good success until it attempted to whip Pendleton. Hepppner's boys were defeated that day, 49-0, because they hadn't yet heard of the forward pass, just instituted, which Pendleton used successfully. Harry recalled those good old days on a visit to the home of his brother, Levi, here the first of the week. Now located on a farm near Winthrop, Wash., in the Okanogan country, it was his second visit in the old home town since leaving here in 1915. His last visit was for two days in 1920. Just to keep the Morgan name in the athletic limelight, he has a 17-year-old son who has won letters consistently on Winthrop high teams, including baseball, basketball, football and skiing. The son stands six feet tall and weighs 217 pounds. Mr. Morgan's sister, Mrs. J. P. Conder of Free-water, accompanied him on the visit here.

IS NAVY MUSICIAN

Leo Perry attended school in Hepppner as a boy, leaving here at quite a young age though not then so small in stature. He is now a first class musician in Uncle Sam's navy, located at Norfolk, Va., for where he left Thursday with Mrs. Perry on return from a visit here at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. E. Gilliam, in company with their mother, Mrs. Mary R. Robotoye of Baker. Now weighing upwards of 260, Leo made home folks gape as they saw him swinging up the street, dressed in navy whites. He started tooting the trombone at the tender age of 14, says Mrs. Gilliam, and has been at it ever since. All took in the Pendleton Round-Up while on the visit here and Mrs. Perry, who had her first view of the big western show, evidenced thorough appreciation, Mrs. Gilliam reports.

"It was almost a case of self-defense," said Rufus Hill in reporting the slaying of Dick Wilkinson's deer. He was with Dick at the time. "We were following a path up the mountainside when the buck came charging down the path straight for us. Dick's shot took it right between the eyes."

Ralph Yeager and two children of Yakima were week-end visitors at the home of Mr. Yeager's father, J. L. Yeager. Mr. Yeager is a member of the postal delivery force in the Washington city.
