Lower Transportation Costs

SOME fifteen years have elapsed since Morrow county voted some $550,000 in bonds for construction of a system of market roads. Though the original issue is now only half retired and the interest payment is considerable, who will deny that the better roads which were brought have given as much or more than the money's worth in saving on transportation costs?

True, as Judge Johnson pointed out to the Lions club Monday, if the court now had available for new construction the amount that must go to pay interest on the bonds, more and better roads could now be had. But the bonds were issued and the original road system has been completed for several years. And lower transportation costs have been enjoyed—just how much lower is a matter only for conjecture.

Each year for several years past, too, the county budget committee has allowed $500 toward support of Inland Empire Waterways association. This also has been a good investment, as pointed out by Judge Johnson in another column. Directly traceable to the work of the association is the saving in cost of half a cent a gallon in the price of gasoline locally. That has repaid Morrow county's contribution to the association several times already and will continue to pay dividends thru-out the years to come.

Farm leaders for years have said that this section must cut wheat production costs in order to sell in the world market where it is forced to compete. The item of transportation is figured in the production cost and is one of the last remaining items for attack if lower costs are to be attained. There should be no cessation in the fight to attain this goal.

EXCHANGE PLAN INTERESTS

Oregon State College—A recent announcement that the State department at Washington has completed arrangements to encourage exchange scholarships and professorships with Latin-American countries has been greeted by keen interest on the part of the college administration.

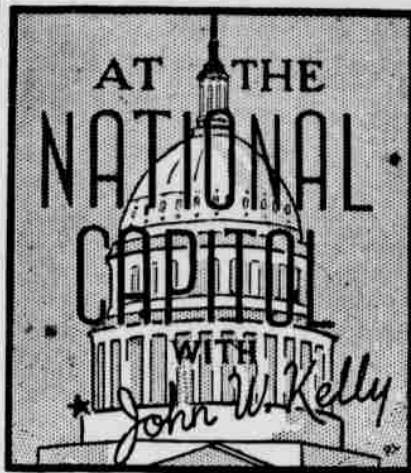

President George W. Peavy wired the State department that O. S. C., through the cooperation of Phi Kappa Phi scholastic honor society, has been sponsoring an exchange with the University of Chile for two years and finds it mutually beneficial. President Peavy tendered the cooperation of the college in proposed plans and requested further details.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27—They're scaring people around here unnecessarily. Gates to the White House have been clanged shut and armed policemen stand there to shoo the throng of tourists away. Here-tofore tourists could enter and wander around the grounds, feeding peanuts to the gray squirrels. That's out now. The famed East room of the White House, visited by several thousand tourists daily, is barred.

Ropes and barricades are in the corridors of the sprawling capitol building to curb visitors. Even members of Congress have had to identify themselves to young law students who compose the capitol police. Last year these youths were unarmed; they were so green that it was not considered safe for them to carry weapons. They have been rearmed.

Guards at the doors of public buildings give the double-O to every man or woman entering the place. The policeman watching the faded Constitution and Declaration turns gimlet eyes on visitors scanning the documents as though he expected someone to steal the papers and ruin the country by leaving it minus the Constitution.

Knots of women wander through senate and house office buildings carrying small American flags and banners with the legend "Keep us out of war." If the group of women is too large, the police break them up and order them to stop screaming.

Fireworks will come when the Dies committee investigating un-American activities undertakes to place several members of Congress on the witness stand to ask them questions, based on speeches they made on the floor. . . . All sorts of freak inventions guaranteed to "win the war" are being urged on the government by enthusiastic inventors. . . . A whisper that someone swiped the plans for a device to unscramble code messages, making any secret code as plain as day.
