Progress Seen in KOAC Argument

Oregon State College—The oral arguments at Washington, D. C., on the KOAC-KOY radio case resulted in "moderate indication of progress" toward the goal of protecting KOAC listeners from excessive interference, according to word received from L. R. Breithaupt, extension economist, who was in Washington at the time attending the annual agricultural outlook conference. Breithaupt is also in charge of the campaign to protect the state-owned station.

The commission members will now weigh all the evidence and arguments personally before reaching a final conclusion, Breithaupt learned. No time was set for announcing the decision. The case arose over the request of KOY of Phoenix, Ariz., to use the same wavelength now occupied by KOAC.

Meanwhile the state board of control has let the contract for enlarging KOAC to 5000-watt power, contingent upon winning the KOY case. Money for such expansion was appropriated by the last legislature.

Speaker Urges Parity Farm Prices

Hood River, Nov. 17—Only when industry and labor realize that agriculture must have a parity place in the national economic picture can a permanent and sound prosperity come to this nation, R. W. Blackburn, secretary of the American Farm Bureau Federation, told the Oregon State Farm Bureau convention here Friday evening.

Blackburn emphasized that repeated surveys and observations of facts have revealed beyond any doubt that the nation as a whole can only prosper in direct relationship to the welfare of its agricultural life.

Speaking of the complex relationships now existing in our national economy Blackburn said: "The objectives of all three groups—industry, labor and agriculture—are identical. They want national prosperity. That is one thing that all are agreed on."

"Industry and labor must eventually recognize the fact that our complex economic system, based upon mass factory production, simply cannot operate successfully on a stabilized basis unless farm commodity prices, industrial prices and industrial wages are brought into parity relationship so that all groups may have the buying power to absorb the products of industry year after year in large volume."

Striking at the so-called "economy of scarcity" Blackburn declared: "Industry and labor must realize too that the only way to increase national wealth is through the greater production and use of goods and services. Agriculture has done its part, is doing its part, and will continue to do its part."

"Farmers produce an abundance at fair prices. Industry and labor, too, have generally tried to better their individual position through monopoly approach. The protective tariff system, the trend to huge corporate units of industry, the trade association idea—all of these have tended to monopolistic control. It was natural that labor should take its cue from industry's practices and try to solve the problem of individual members by limiting membership and keeping hourly wages high."

"High wages are greatly to be desired, but only when such wages are fair. We know from experience that production and use of goods can proceed in normal volume only when industrial prices, industrial wages and commodity prices are in balance. Intelligent, economic statesmanship should seek to maintain that balance. That, after all, is all there is to the parity concept—price and wage levels that will permit maximum consumption of goods and services by a maximum number of people at all times."

"We invite—we even challenge—labor and industry to meet us on the common ground of parity."

Blackburn reviewed the evolution of the present price basis between farmers and other groups, pointing out that agriculture and particularly organized agriculture through the Farm Bureau has been engaged in a long fight to obtain parity levels. He predicted that through a continuation of such efforts that economic level would eventually be reached.

State Had 157 People A Century Ago

Oregon Writers Project, WPA

Oregon's total white population in 1839 numbered 157; the first post-office west of the Rockies was established at Astoria on March 9, 1847; and an 1863 miner's two-day "diggin's" netted him $5,600, are a few of the historical sidelights listed in the Oregon Almanac for 1940 written by the Oregon Writers' project of the WPA. Other Oregon Almanac items state that in 1861 Oregonians agreed that the state's greatest need was "at least one throughfare over which travelers may pass at any season of the year," and that a little more than a half century later $6,000,000 was appropriated for the construction of many Oregon "throughfares."

The Oregon Almanac for 1940 gives a brief review of serious and amusing incidents in Oregon history, interspersed with bits of original verse, nonsense and pen sketches. The Oregon Almanac, scheduled for early publication, will be on sale at newsstands and book stores early in December.
