

The Dalles Man

for the first year. That the good effect of Tuesday evening's meeting might not be lost, he moved the appointment of a committee to further steer the organization work. The chair named on his committee Hanson Hughes, L. E. Bisbee, Clarence Rosewall, C. J. D. Bauman and F. W. Turner, with O. G. Crawford, secretary.

Success of a commercial organization lies basically in its ability to properly orient itself in the broader picture of empire development, Mr. Nelson emphasized. A broad conception of projects undertaken by the club must be had to avoid petty animosities hindering their attainment. Individual members must not expect favoritism over the group, but each must take his chances of getting his share when benefits of the projects are attained.

He told how this procedure had been followed at The Dalles as the chamber there led in the fight for the Bonneville development, in obtaining the sealocks at that point, and in bringing the visit of the Charles L. Wheeler, first ocean-going vessel to reach a hundred-mile inland port, which thoroughly established the claim of Port of The Dalles to be recognized as a seaport, last year.

He explained the difference between "vision" and "visionary" as applied to a commercial club secretary's work. What often times is considered visionary may contain true elements of vision, and it is for the directors to listen attentively to all proposals for improvement, then to scrutinize it carefully under the magnifying glass of reason to see if a workable project may not be obtained. Elbert Hubbard's "Code of Ethics" was recited as a good guide for organization policy.

How The Dalles chamber organization functions under model constitution of commerce was explained to assist in the organization work here.

The Dalles men offered further their services to the committee and it was expected the committee would sit in on a chamber meeting there in the near future.

Election of a board of directors was held yesterday when the following were chosen to direct the policies of the new organization: L. E. Bisbee, Chas. B. Cox, D. M. Ward, F. W. Turner, Hanson Hughes, P. W. Mahoney, W. C. Rosewall, C. J. D. Bauman, and a tie between D. A. Wilson and B. C. Pinckney.

Officers of the organization will be chosen from the board of directors.

Hunters, Anglers

reserve area revealed 40,000 deer, altogether too many for the winter range carrying capacity. Explaining the impossibility of sustaining such a large number by artificial feeding, he said the only recourse was to let the hunters take a certain number of doe if large numbers of the deer were not to die of starvation. The law bringing this into effect was the result of action of Grant county people, and not voluntary on the part of the commission, he elucidated.

Dams, irrigation ditches, and other man-made devices have been added to natural enemies to complicate the commissions problem of fish propagation, said Mr. Wire in answer to newspaper editorials entitled, "What Becomes of Our Fish?" He acknowledged bafflement on the part of the commission nearly as great as that of the editorial writers. Just to show that nature's balance in itself holds down increase in fish population tremendously, he told of a survey made in Alaska. There check was made on a stream which man had not touched. When salmon went up to spawn, the large fish were counted, and after the spawn, the fingerlings which returned were counted. It was found that just two fingerlings returned for each large fish that went up to spawn, though it was known that each female salmon hatches 10,000 to 14,000 eggs.

Report of outcome of last seasons crow-magpie contest was given by George Howard, club secretary. First in the three districts were Raymond Parrish, Heppner; Robert Hoskins, one; Bobby Wright, Rhea dinances will be passed upon receipt of the new law book.

In the new traffic ordinance city dads recommended inclusion of certain "through" streets along with Oregon-Washington highway within the city where "slow" or "stop" signs on intersecting streets will assist in clearing traffic and tend to reduce possibility of accidents. Included in the recommended "through" streets are Gale street between Oregon-Washington highway and May street, South Main from May street to city limit, and South Court between May and Hager streets. South Main and South Court streets were so designated to clear traffic headed to and from the Heppner-Wasco and upper Willow creek highways, and Gale street was named as being the second heaviest traveled thoroughfare in the city.

The for-hire vehicle license ordinance, also awaiting adoption upon arrival of the new city code book, would assess $12.50 a year fee upon vehicles under one ton capacity, and $15 a year upon those of more than a ton capacity, covering all vehicles operating wholly within the city or outside the city to a distance of three miles.

An amendment to the ordinance to control radio interference was recommended to remove the present hours of 6 p. m. to 12 midnight when no radio interference may be broadcast, thus making it unlawful for anyone to broadcast radio interference at any hour of the day or night, excepted only interference from such appliance as are deemed essential to the preservation of health or peace of the city and which may not be reasonably guarded to prevent broadcasting such interference.

Permit for certain improvements at the E. M. Gibson residence was granted. Proposed graveling on street outlet to Balm Fork road will not be attempted until spring, it was announced. Current expense and other bills against the city were allowed.
