Democracy Gets Start in Family Says Mrs. Maris

With the international situation one to cause great anxiety, parents here in Oregon, even though apparently far removed from danger, are taking stock of the meaning of democracy in their own families, says Mrs. Buena Maris, extension specialist in family relationships, who has been taking part in parents' meetings and study club groups throughout the state.

Among questions being discussed in such gatherings are these. Is the democratic way of living something to be learned as a real achievement instead of something children will use spontaneously after they leave an autocratic family? Is there a democracy? If so, do parents need to teach children to carry responsibility as a privilege?

Mothers in these study groups are taking stock of their own families to see whether each member has a right to responsibilities and a voice in the planning of family activities, says Mrs. Maris. Some are finding that they have an autocratic family, in which one or both parents take all the responsibility, make all the decisions and lay down the rules and enforce obedience.

Parents who want their families to operate on the democratic basis "of the family, by the family, and for the family" need to find some way in which all members of the family can participate in planning work, fun, and privileges, and can share responsibility for carrying out such plans, Mrs. Maris said.

One method parents find for achieving this participation is by means of the family council way of talking things over as a group. This is helpful both when children are young and eager to be a part of the family and also when they are adolescent and beginning to feel the pull of many interests away from the family.

Mrs. Maris finds that fathers are just as concerned as the mothers in the discussion of these questions. Out of a group of 135 Oregon fathers who were asked if they would like to participate in a "fathers only" forum to study their youngsters, 87 responded favorably.

CARD OF THANKS

We take this means of thanking neighbors and friends who assisted during the illness and death of Charles C. Shilling; also for the floral offerings and expressions of sympathy.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Funk, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Arnold, A. L., L. A., and Leo Osmin, Lena Knowles.

Protection of civil rights is a duty of the state, in the opinion of Governor Sprague who feels that the federal government should keep its hands off this problem unless and until two states have shown themselves to be "flagrantly derelict in their duty in this respect."

10-Year Results With Irrigated Pastures Issued

Results of 10 years of continuous experimentation with irrigated pastures in Oregon indicate that good pasture usually furnishes cheaper feed for the dairy cow than any other farm crop. Such is the statement made in a new bulletin just issued by the state college experiment station on "The Value of Irrigated Pastures for Dairy Cattle."

"Greater use of pasture in the farm management plan is resulting in lower production costs and greater net returns for many progressive Oregon dairymen," according to the authors of the bulletin, H. P. Ewalt and I. R. Jones of the experiment station staff. "Pasture is cheaper than the other roughages such as hay, silage, root crops or soiling crops, because of the higher yield and greater digestibility and because there are no harvesting costs and only comparatively low seeding and management costs."

The bulletin gives the results of grazing straight ladino clover pastures, as well as those where clover and grass mixtures are used. It also shows the results of fertilization of irrigated pastures. In general, ladino clover and grass mixtures yielded more than either grass or clover alone. The four-year annual average yield per acre on 14.5 acres of mixed ladino and grass pasture was equivalent to 4.8 tons of alfalfa hay or 226 bushels of oats.

The tests show that most profitable yields can be obtained if fertilizer is used. Where such large yields are taken off, it is only to be expected that fertility must be returned, the authors say. The yield on areas fertilized with 300 pounds of 16 per cent superphosphate per acre was 75 per cent greater than on areas not fertilized.

On experimental plots cows obtained 65 per cent of their nutrient requirement from the pasture and grazed 189 days per year. The area carried 1.4 cows per acre daily during that period, and these produced an average of about 40 pounds of four per cent milk per day.
