Bird Propagation Boosted by State

A new project recently inaugurated by the State Game Commission through aid of Pittman-Robertson federal funds provides for the development of seed stock refuges in the Willamette Valley for the benefit of pheasants, quail and other small game.

Sites of not less than 1,000 acres each that are suitable for restocking purposes will be selected and easement control for a period of five years secured from the landowners, which will give the Commission the right to develop food and cover resources on the land, restock it with game and regulate the seasons and methods of hunting.

The program proposes to keep the refuges closed to all hunting for a period of three years, after which they will be opened on a rotation basis. It is anticipated that this plan, together with last year's closure of the Willamette Valley, will accomplish a great deal toward the rehabilitation of the pheasant and small game in the western part of Oregon.

Inasmuch as a detailed survey of game conditions had previously been made in Benton county by the Oregon Research Unit, the present program is being initiated in that county to take advantage of the data already available but will be extended to other counties of the Valley also.

Although the work has been under way for only a short period, farmers and landowners have shown a great interest in the program and in most cases have cooperated readily in signing up the necessary easements.

Predatory Animal Funds Allocated

Fifteen Oregon counties have been allocated a total of $17,250 for predatory animal control in 1940 by the state department of agriculture. This, together with the state game commission's $11,700 and WPA funds for this purpose, will give every county in the state some monies for predatory animal control, reports Dr. W. H. Lytle, chief of the division of animal industry.

The appropriation, balance of the $36,000 voted for this work by the 1939 legislature, is based on necessity for control and financial cooperation received from the counties.

The allocation by the department: Baker county, $900; Gilliam, $1,500; Grant, $2,000; Harney, $1,500; Jackson, $1,500; Klamath, $1,000; Lake, $1,500; Malheur, $750; Marion, $500; Morrow, $1,500; Sherman, $600; Umatilla, $1,000; Wallowa, $1,000; Wasco, $1,000; Wheeler, $1,000.

A check on gasoline pumps that have not made application for 1940 licenses is in progress this week, report officials of the state department of agriculture. Oregon has more than 13,000 retail pumps.

Oregon "Birthplace" Rural Electrification

Believe it or not, but the Hood River valley was the birthplace of rural electrification in the United States, according to report made by Everett Davis, extension specialist in agricultural engineering at Oregon State college.

Davis found that the first strictly rural electric distribution line in the United States was built in 1906 and was two miles long, connecting five Hood River valley farms.

Today Oregon is still a leader in rural electrification with more than 53 percent of all farms in the state electrified. Three years ago only 32 percent of the farms were served by electricity. Latest figures show upwards of 7000 miles of rural line serving more than 33,000 rural customers in this state.

The Rural Electrification administration has assisted substantially in extending rural service within the last year or so, says Davis. Four projects are either under construction or have been recently completed, to serve about 1300 farmers. Extending lines in populous farming districts is fairly simple, but in sparsely settled regions like the Eastern Oregon wheat country, distribution lines are so costly as to be prohibitive under present conditions in many localities.

To each of our customers

THANK YOU

FOR YOUR NEIGHBORLY

COOPERATION

During the electric service interruption
on New Year's Day

We appreciate your patience and good nature while waiting for service to be restored. It did a lot to make a difficult job easier.

The trouble was caused by severe sleet conditions in a localized area between Mosier and Hood River. For a stretch of about a mile, high up on the side of the mountain, our Powderdale transmission line became loaded with ice to the point where something just had to go! Wires were weighted down with 6 inches of ice. Poles and crossarms were similarly covered. The hillside was as slick as a skating rink.

To reach the breaks in the line, our men had to chop steps in the ice. In many places they had to crawl on hands and knees. But somehow they managed to set new poles, string new wire, and get the line back in service early Tuesday morning. It was the kind of repair job that looks hopeless to any but the members of an experienced, level-headed organization which puts maintenance of electric service ahead of everything.

So we want to thank them publicly for the fine job they did under most difficult conditions, to the end that your electric service might be fully restored as quickly as possible.

And in case we were too busy to extend greetings on Monday, here's wishing you A Happy New Year!
