

Fair Outlook in Sight for Spring Crops in General

The outlook for spring sown field crops and vegetables in general is somewhat better than a year ago, according to extensive information and data contained in the annual outlook review of this important group of farm commodities just published for distribution in Oregon by the agricultural extension service. The principal basis for some improvement in the market outlook is the prospect of more moderate supplies of the products.

Domestic demand for farm products is expected to continue on a relatively high level during the 1940-41 marketing season, if the war in Europe continues another year or more, but foreign demand has been curtailed owing to the war, and farm costs are expected to be somewhat higher in 1940 than in 1939.

Despite prospects for a wheat crop scarcely large enough for domestic needs, no shortage of wheat is expected owing to heavy stocks of wheat carried over. On the whole, present conditions indicate that reserves will still be well above average on July 1, 1941, but probably around two-thirds as large as on July 1, 1940.

Ample supplies of feed grains and hay are expected for the 1940-41 feeding season in the country as a whole. The pig crop of 1940 is expected to be much larger than in 1938 but probably somewhat smaller than the record crop of 1939. Milk cow numbers are expected to increase as the number of heifers is greater than required for replacements, and moderate increase may occur in beef cattle and sheep if feed and range conditions are near average this year.

Present prospects indicate increased production of potatoes, flaxseed and beans. The Oregon forage crop seed industry is expected to continue to expand with considerable increases in winter field peas, hairy vetch and chewing fescue grass seed, particularly.

The truck crop outlook is better than a year ago as surplus stocks of canned vegetables from the heavy pack of 1938 have been reduced to more nearly normal proportions than a year ago. Production of vegetables for manufacture in 1940 is somewhat uncertain, however.

Acres of all commercial truck crops for marketing fresh is expected to be slightly larger than in 1939, although producers of late celery and onions may not follow the general trend. Late onion production in 1939 was especially heavy owing to high yields and a larger acreage than usual.
