

Washington, D. C., April 17.—Pulp and paper mills in Oregon and Washington will soon feel the effect of the German invasion of the Scandinavian countries and the publishers of newspapers will probably be touched in the pocketbook. There has long been a substantial importation of wood pulp and newsprint from the countries now a battleground (Finnish exports to the United States were so profitable that Finland was able and willing to pay its war debt), and with the seas mined and a tight blockade the supply of wood pulp and newsprint is shut off.

This phase of the war throws the burden of providing pulp and paper on the domestic mills. For the first time in years the domestic mills are not faced with foreign competition in the home market. There are many mills in the Northwest, giving employment to several thousand workers. Last year the union of workers took the initiative in asking members of the Washington and Oregon delegations to curb the influx of foreign pulp and newsprint; asked that a quota be established, for the union did not take the position that no pulp should be admitted. Ordinarily, mill operators would seek the curb on opposition, but with the Oregon and Washington mills the request came from the workers, who argued that the less pulp imported the more employment for mill hands.

Along the coast from Coos Bay to Puget Sound, on the west side of the Cascades, government officials say is one of the ideal areas for pulp and paper manufacture, with an inexhaustible source of raw material. This is the territory which will be benefitted by curtailment of imports from Scandinavia until peace is restored in Europe—when ever that may be.

Rather than meet certain defeat, President Roosevelt did not include in his latest reorganization plan the transfer of the forest service from the department of agriculture to the department of interior. A few days ago, however, Steve Early, presidential secretary, sounded out western senators to learn whether their opposition would extend to the president carving out large chunks of the national forests and turning these over to Secretary Ickes for recreational purposes—making them into national parks and primitive areas. Mr. Early was advised any such transfer would be bitterly fought by every senator from the Pacific coast.

Rep. James W. Mott, Oregon, who championed increase of funds to retain all CCC camps, thinks less highly of the National Resources Planning board, of which Frederic Delano, the president's uncle is chairman. Mr. Mott denounced the board as the most useless and wasteful agency in the government, but he failed to prevent $700,000 being given to it after the president had made a personal appeal.

Wheat export subsidies are limited to the Pacific northwest, the department of agriculture states, and these exports should take care of the surplus in that area. Exports with subsidies are for the Philippines, China and Hong Kong and, on a conservative basis, to Europe. The plan does not contemplate extending the wheat export program to include Central America, although requests have been made for such inclusion.

Because of the construction of Bonneville dam and a break in the Celilo canal, a claim of $358,185 against the government is filed by

A. V. Allen and the Columbia Boat & Barge System, Ltd. Mr. Allen says that he organized and was operating a barge system to take wheat from the upper Columbia down stream when a wall in Celilo canal broke, making the canal impassable. Senator McNary arranged for funds to have the break repaired immediately as an emergency, but nothing was done for a year and the barges could not move the wheat stored east of the canal. Then the army engineers began construction of the dam at Bonneville and that prevented the barges from passing. Because of these obstructions, which damaged the barge company, Allen asks $177,938 individually and $180,-
