

Washington, D. C., June 26.—When President Roosevelt followed public opinion and was giving war materials to France and England, people urged him to give more and more.

Public sentiment shifts like the wind. People who have written members of the Oregon and Washington delegations to give all assistance to the allies short of war, are now expressing their fear that the United States will become involved.

With the intention of showing unity in national defense, the president appointed two leading Republicans to his cabinet, Henry L. Stimson, secretary of war, and Col. Frank Knox, secretary of navy.

Because of their attitude on intervention, the selection of Knox and Stimson has resulted in an unfavorable reaction against the president.

Before this appears in print the president may have asked for the resignation of Frances Perkins (Mrs. Paul Wilson) as secretary of labor.

It adds up to this: The president is gradually being placed in the attitude of heading a war party.

is a safe prediction that the accusation that the administration is a war party will be the major issue in the presidential campaign.

Proposition has been made that airplanes be built in Oregon and Washington (there is a factory at Seattle now), using spruce and the fuselage fabricated in plywood plants.

ship building industry being revived on the Columbia where the smaller navy craft could be constructed. There is a movement on foot to have one of the major airplane engine companies in Connecticut establish a branch in the northwest.

"WE FOUND DAKOTA'S BAD LANDS GOOD!"

The following article, presented in co-operation with the Oregon State Motor association, is one of a series designed to promote travel in the Pacific northwest.

BY LEE BOSTWICK Staff Writer, The Oregonian

IN THIS YEAR when Americans are traveling America in greater numbers than never before, the Black Hills and Bad Lands of South Dakota are rapidly gaining in popularity as tourist attractions.

Here in Oregon this may appear on the surface to have little meaning since the Black Hills are approximately 1500 miles away. However, the popularity of the Black Hills and Bad Lands is of considerable significance to the Pacific northwest.

The Oregon and the Pacific northwest will share in the increased tourist crop of the Black Hills section. From the Black Hills westward all the states are linked together in the growing tourist industry.

"Get acquainted with your neighbor, see what he has to offer, then help him sell it to the traveling public and he will help you in turn."

There are numerous routes that can be taken from Portland to the Black Hills. The motorist has the choice of the Evergreen highway in Washington and the Columbia highway in Oregon in going through the Columbia river gorge. The Washington route can be followed through Yakima to U. S. highway 10 with a side trip to Grand Coulee dam, then on through Spokane, Wallace, Missoula, Butte and on into Yellowstone National park.

One of the principal sights in the Black Hills country is the Mount Rushmore national monument where the faces of Washington, Jefferson, Theodore Roosevelt and Abraham Lincoln are being carved into the granite of a mountain.

The Oregon route along the Columbia offers two choices, one over U. S. highway 395 to Spokane to U. S. 10 and the other over U. S. 30 to Pocatello and then on U. S. 191 to Yellowstone.

Each route has plenty to offer in the way of attractions during the three days required to reach the Black Hills. The northwest caravan followed the first-named route with overnight stops in Spokane, Butte, Yellowstone and Casper. However, the more direct route from Cody, Wyoming, is along

U. S. 14 to Sheridan and U. S. 16 to the Black Hills.

At Rapid City the Pacific northwest caravan was welcomed by Jarvis D. Davenport, president, and R. L. Bronson, executive secretary, and other members of the Black Hills and Bad Lands association.

The climax of any visit to the Black Hills is a trip to Mount Rushmore National monument, the shrine of democracy, where the noted sculptor, Gutzon Borglum, has carved in the 6000-foot granite mountain the faces of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt.

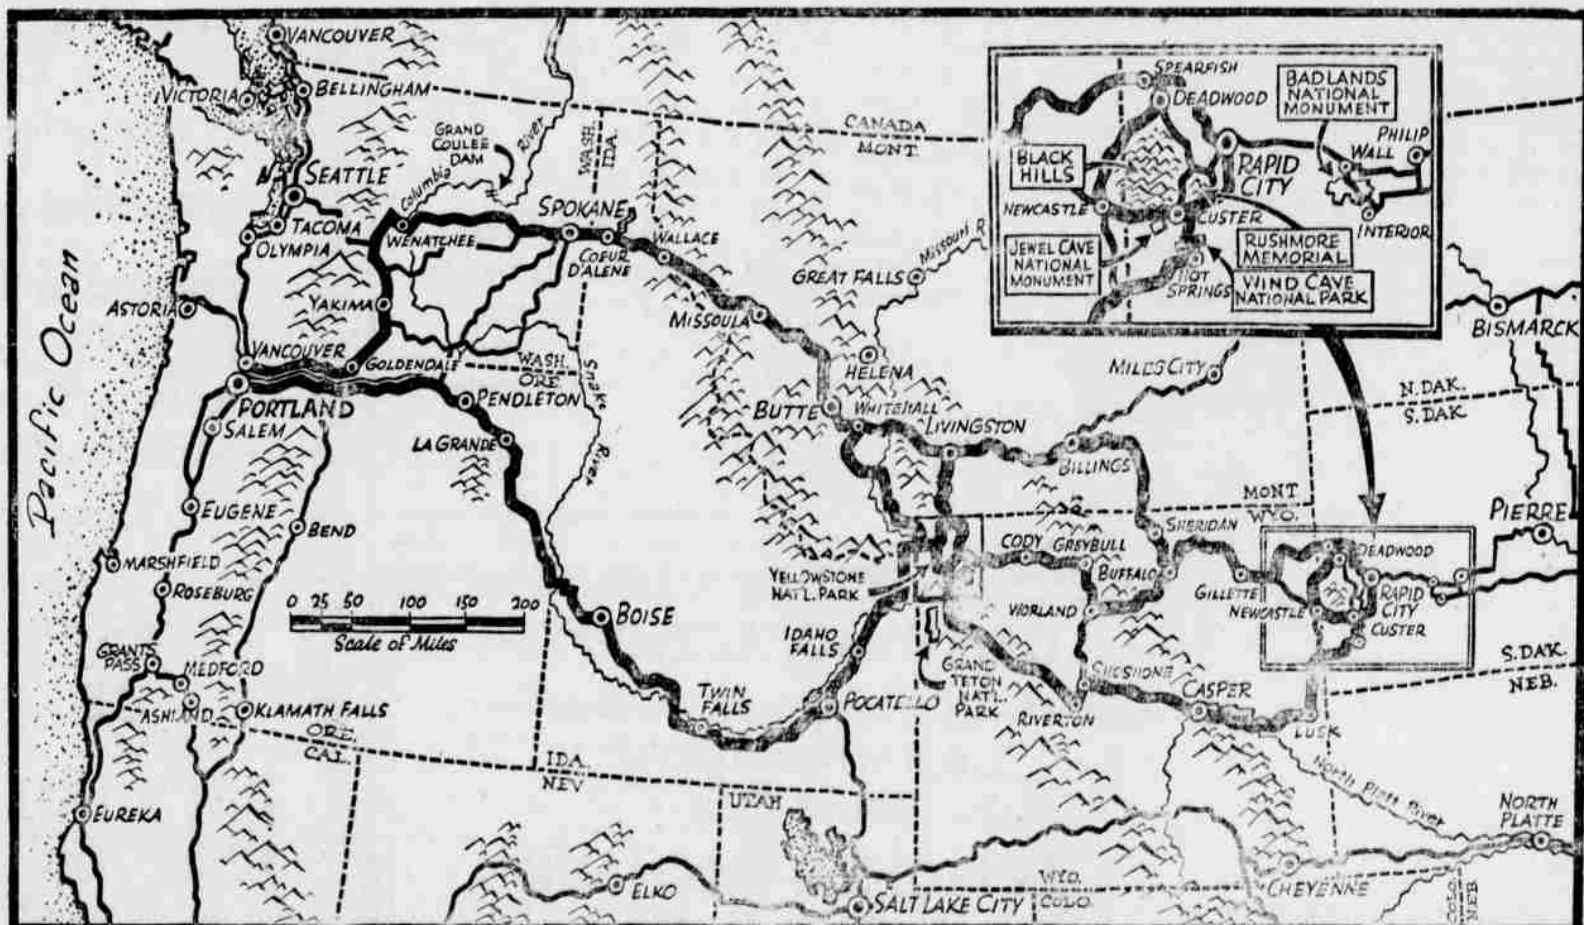

These colossal carvings are all the more remarkable because the only trained men working on the project have been Sculptor Borglum and his son, Lincoln Borglum. The others have been local miners.

There are good highways leading to the memorial and where tunnels have been necessary they have been constructed so as to form a frame for the four faces in shining granite. Nearest viewpoint is 1500 feet from the carvings.

In addition to Rushmore monument there is much more to be seen in the Black Hills, a region with a fascinating story of earth making. This story ranges from the ancient fossil beds of Bad Lands National monument where prehistoric alligators, rhinoceroses, three-toed horses and other long-extinct animals once roamed.

In the southern Black Hills region is Wind Cave National park, between Custer and Hot Springs. Wind cave lies in the great Pahaska limestone formation which also contains several other large subterranean caverns.

The routes from the northwest country into the Bad Lands and Black Hills are mapped above. Insert is a detail map of the Black Hills country.
