Water Ruined Wheat but Income Saved

One of the first Oregon farmers to benefit this year from federal crop insurance is Mrs. Ellen Herlihy of Algoma district, Klamath county, shown in inset with her two grandchildren. Due to bursting of a dike, waters of upper Klamath lake rushed in upon her wheat field, giving rise to the flood scene above. Mrs. Herlihy's farm home is in the background, flood waters almost upon to the front door. Mrs. Herlihy, who is a widow and manages her farm alone, received 1009 bushels of wheat from the crop insurance corporation in payment of the loss.

Thousands of 4-H'ers
Eye State Fair

Upwards of 2000 4-H club members will attend this year's state fair, starting on Labor day, September 2, as active participants, according to estimates by the state club office at Oregon State college. These will be attending at exhibitors or members of demonstration groups or judging teams. While the 4-H dormitory on the grounds accommodates only about 500 at a time, attendance will be staggered throughout the week so that most of the clubbers will be housed there.

Major contest interest this year is centering around the dairy production and dairy consumption demonstration teams. State winners in these contests will be given expense free trip to the National Dairy show in Harrisburg, Pa., this fall.

Between 700 and 750 4-H club livestock exhibitors are expected at this year's fair. The second annual livestock auction will be held following the judging, at which around 250 head of commercial baby beeves, lambs, and hogs will be sold.

Campus Entrance
Gates Being Installed

Oregon State College—Installation of the new wrought iron campus gates has been started at the east end of the lower campus, where it joins the west end of Madison street. The huge gates were constructed as a WPA art project two years ago. The $1500 needed to install them was raised by means of a benefit garden tour held here last spring.

The gates will provide a monumental entrance to the campus in keeping with the size and character of the institution. Plans call for the future construction of scenic drives leading from the gates around either side of the lower campus and connecting with the upper campus streets.

Installation of the gates is expected to be completed soon after the opening of college this fall.

Wheat Insurance
Deadline is Aug. 31

Closing date for winter wheat growers to make application for all-risk insurance on their 1941 crop is August 31 this year, hence little time remains for Oregon wheat growers to obtain this protection, warns N. C. Donaldson, state AAA executive officer. The August 31 closing date is uniform throughout the country this year and no applications or premium payments will be accepted after that date even though the crop may not be planted at that time.

Federal wheat crop insurance has been gaining in popularity throughout the eastern Oregon wheat growing section, and is this year being taken by more western Oregon growers, according to reports received at the state office. Applications may be made at any county office, where the transaction can be completed promptly.

More and more growers now consider it good business to protect their wheat crops with an insurance contract in order to be sure of some wheat to sell every year, says Donaldson. All the care in the world will not prevent destruction of the crop at times through hazards beyond the control of the grower.

Home Garden Hour
Arranged Over KOAC

Plans for the KOAC home garden hour program for 1940-41 have been completed and a leaflet listing the weekly subjects from September to June, inclusive has just been issued for free distribution. These programs are developed in cooperation with the Oregon Federation of Garden Clubs and are conducted under a study plan by which KOAC garden clubs are organized for group meetings and discussions.

Last year 25 such study groups were organized, totaling 299 members located in 12 counties. The KOAC programs have proved so popular that they are repeated over private stations in areas not adequately reached by the daytime KOAC broadcast. Stations cooperating in re-broadcasting these programs are KUJ in Walla Walla, KLBM in La Grande, and KBND in Bend.

Copies of the program and instructions for organizing a radio garden club may be had free by addressing KOAC at Corvallis.

Increased Power
Permit Given KOAC

The long sought improvement of KOAC, the state-owned radio station at Corvallis, has been brought a long step nearer realization through the granting by the federal communications commission of the petition to increase the KOAC power from 1000 watts to 5000 watts daytime service, according to officials of Oregon State college, licensee of the station.

Approval of the power boost opens the way for the state board of higher education to make use of the appropriation made by the 1939 legislature for the construction of a new and modern transmitter on college property several miles north of Corvallis. The appropriation has been unused pending action by the commission on the long fought effort of the state station to protect its wave length and modernize its facilities.

Regarding the wave length, the commission had previously ruled that an Arizona station, KOY, would be permitted to use the 550-kilocycle band, but limited that station to 1000 watts and promised that "if objectionable interference should develop... the commission will enter an order requiring appropriate protection."

KOAC engineers submitted four complete engineering plans before all objections of the navy department and others to the proposed expansion were removed. The plan accepted calls for a directional antenna to protect the Tongue Point naval base. This design will be a real benefit to most KOAC listeners, however, as the daytime signals to the north, east, and south, where most of the population is, will be increased about five-times, while the modern equipment and increased power will also give those to the west better service than they now receive, according to the engineers.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Buhman and children departed Tuesday for Canby in response to word of the illness of Mr. Buhman's mother. They expected to remain for a week.
