Mr. and Mrs. Burton Peck entertained a large group of friends and relatives at their home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Hunt were hosts for a farewell party at their home one evening last week in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Moffatt Dennis who are going to Portland.

Mrs. Etta Hunt of Portland is visiting relatives here.

Mrs. Lorena Isom and Mr. Louis Marquardt were married August 19 at Lewiston, Idaho.

SPEED CONSUMES OIL

Cars which are driven at sustained high speed for a long distance require more attention to lubrication than those driven the same distance at moderate speed or with occasional stops, according to the Emergency Road Service of the Oregon State Motor association. Sustained high speed generates considerable heat in all moving parts and this heat consumes lubricants at a rapid rate.

Grandstand Race Prefaces Round-Up

Pendleton August 28.—(Special)—Where records in bulldogging, roping, bucking and racing have been made at the Pendleton Round-Up grounds, another lightning event is being staged—it's the race to complete the new $35,000 concrete, fire-proof grandstand for the coming show, Sept. 11-12-13-14, to replace the structure destroyed by fire August 16.

Victory is already assured, and Pendleton promises to its thousands of visitors adequate, comfortable seating, as the result of day and night work by a crew of 90 men. Funds for the new grandstand came from the people of Pendleton, who also received some assistance from generous neighboring friends.

In addition to actual cash, these friends have loaned to the Round-Up pioneer vehicles including stage coaches, buckboards, wagons, phaetons and countless other old-time paraphernalia for the Westward Ho! parade, to substitute for the equipment lost in the recent blaze. The parade, Friday morning feature of the Round-Up, will wind through Pendleton streets at 10 a. m., with 5000 taking part, including Indians in tribal splendor, and whites garbed in the picturesque fashion of frontier days. The Indians will include the 2000 camped in the Indian village at the grounds.

In every respect, the Round-Up, now in its thirty-first year, biggest and oldest show in the Pacific Northwest, will be up to the usual standard of excellence, declared the Round-Up Association.

Total purses are $8500, of which $4000 will go for the four major events: bulldogging, steer roping, calf roping and bronc riding, for which Rodeo Association of America points are awarded.

There will be 60 head of bucking stock, including those supplied by Moomaw & Bernard, of Tonasket, Wash., and McCarty & Elliott, of Chugwater, Wyo. Sixty Texas long-horns will be used for the dogging and steer roping, and 22 head of calves for the calf roping event.

As usual, the Round-Up is proud that it is the only show in the world today that offers to rodeo fans the chance to see two types of bucking contests—the chute method and the snubbing method. Chutes are used for the world bucking, while for the northwest bucking horses are snubbed and saddled in the arena.

Happy Canyon, night show of the Round-Up, staged up-town, has spent $11,000 in improvements this year, including new seating facilities in the grandstand, and a new maple dance floor, best in eastern Oregon, in the pavilion.

Airplane Shots Show Electrical Industry

Vivid airplane shots of the Columbia river basin—ranging from the mouth of the mighty river to the picturesque Wallowa mountains and from the fruitful Yakima valley to the pine-blanketed Deschutes country—are one of the many features of "24-Hour Service," a sound movie scheduled for free showings at the Star theater here Thursday, September 19.

Into every corner of the territory it serves, Pacific Power & Light company, producer of "24-Hour Service," sent the cameraman to record the industry and resources of each locality. Historic spots, outstanding scenic points and local people at work and at play throughout the Columbia river area are pictured.

Pilot of the plane from which the aerial portion of the picture was taken was Roy Schreck, aerial weather observer once lost in the wilds of western Idaho for several days following a crash on one of his meteorological flights.

Basically the picture is a fast-moving and dramatic story of the electric power industry, picturing the complex generation, transmission and distribution processes of modern electric service. On this groundwork is built the whole fascinating picture of this part of the Pacific northwest, with many sequences showing various local industries of the region at work.

Many Improvements Await OSC Students

Oregon State College.—Numerous improvements including major building changes will greet returning O. S.C. students at the opening of the fall term September 30. Freshmen and other new students will report September 23 for a week of getting acquainted and preliminary instruction and examinations.

Biggest change for students will be the completed and enlarged facilities on the ground and mezzanine floors of the Memorial Union building. These alterations will be finished soon after college opens. A new wing of the library is under construction and Shepard hall has been remodeled inside for the public speaking department. Botany laboratories have been enlarged and several departments have been shifted to new quarters.

CARBON IN MOTOR

An excessive amount of carbon in increases the compression ratio because carbon is not compressible according to the Emergency Road Service of the Oregon State Motor association. This condition causes a ping or spark knock to occur.
