State Corn Show Dates Announced; Prizes Increased

Dates have been set for the fourth annual Oregon state corn show and advance arrangements completed to make this year's show bigger and more widely attended than last year's and with more premiums offered, says C. W. Smith, county agent leader at Oregon State college and chairman of the cooperative committee in charge of the show.

This year's dates are November 22 and 23, the two days immediately following Thanksgiving, and the location will be the same as last year, in the Museum building at Oregon State college. The state corn husking contest will be held again in the armory nearby.

The state corn show committee met recently and decided on a number of changes in this year's premium list which will be issued soon. Most important of these changes is the creation of a new class for hybrid corn. This will provide a separate class for the 10-ear samples of hybrid corn and eliminate competition with the open pollinated varieties.

The exhibit for the hybrid class this year will include eight pounds of shelled corn in addition to the 10 ears, as judging will be based more on the corn as feed rather than on a seed corn basis. This hybrid corn class will be in addition to the hybrid corn growing contest requiring complete records of production on a minimum area.

A total of $500 in cash prize money is again being supplied for the show by the First National Bank of Portland, which was one of the original boosters for increased corn production in this state. Each of the general state farm organizations, Grange, Farmers Union and Farm Bureau, is supplying one or more class trophies and is represented on the corn show committee.

The agricultural committee of the Portland Chamber of Commerce is taking the responsibility of raising the necessary expense money and the extension service is being responsible for the actual management and staging of the show. Both the 4-H club and Future Farmer organizations are represented on the committee and special classes are provided for these groups.

State High School Driver Education Courses

The above picture just released by State authorities is a typical illustration of the methods by which safe driving is now being taught in the High Schools. This preparation, emphasizing correct driver attitudes and habits, sponsored by leading educators and State authorities, is both thorough and comprehensive—a subject "preferred" by many prospective student drivers.

Landscape Ideas in New Circular

The wave of home building that has been taking place in Oregon has stimulated unusual interest in landscape work and general gardening. So many requests have been received for information on laying out ground plans that the extension service at Oregon State college has just issued a mimeographed circular on the subject entitled "Landscape Architecture," by A. L. Peck, head of that work at the college.

The principles of landscape architecture are just as applicable to a small farm home area as to a huge estate or city park, says Professor Peck. One of the first principles in either case is to provide for utmost convenience, as no amount of beauty will compensate for the annoyance of inconvenience.

Professor Peck urges that any improvement work start with a plan, no matter how crude. A plan holds one to a given line of development instead of haphazard use of unrelated ideas.

The circular outlines simple methods of procedure and includes some suggestions on planting materials. Copies may be had free at any extension office.

Hanson Hughes Has Enjoyable Trip East

A look-in on congress while it was at work on the big preparedness program, through courtesy of Rep. Walter M. Pierce and Senator Charles L. McNary, was one of the highlights of a trip from which Hanson Hughes, local merchant, returned Sunday evening. Mr. Hughes spent four days in the national capital.

Leaving Heppner a month before, his itinerary went south by way of San Francisco where he attended the world fair, and on into Mexico with stops at Phoenix, Ariz., and El Paso, Texas. He visited New Orleans where the heat was oppressive but sights of the city impressive. He stopped in Richmond, Va., where he found much of historical interest, and at Galax, former home of a number of Heppner people, which he found to be a lively little industrial city. He said the nicest little grocery store seen on the whole trip was located at Galax. After visiting the nation's capital he went on to New York for four days, taking in the world fair there. Many of the foreign buildings were found closed, but exhibits of France and England were still open. On the return he stopped over at Springfield and Hartsville, Mo., his old home, for a visit with relatives. Business conditions seemed generally good in the sections visited, and the trip throughout was highly enjoyable, reported Mr. Hughes.

"Daddy telephoned last night from 'way off somewhere"

"Mother says folks didn't have telephones once upon a time and she wonders what they ever did without them. Just think, she says, how tired she'd be, if our telephone wasn't here to help her do her errands every day. And tonight, she says, Daddy will call us from 'way off, to say Good-night and tell us when he'll be home. I'm going to stay right here beside the telephone until Daddy calls. I'm going to ask him what Mother means when she says, every night, 'Little girl, sleep safer: we have a telephone!'"
