

Washington, D. C., Oct. 3.-Threat of possible war now confronts the United States on the Pacific coast. Developments in the Far East are not conducive to peace and the acts of President Roosevelt are increasing the irritation of the Japanese. Next week will be the last in which scrap iron can be shipped to Japan, thereby shutting off a supply vital to its war machine. In retaliation the Japanese may take steps to shut off United States sources of supply of tin, rubber and quinine, which they can do by moving in on the Dutch East Indies.

French Indo-China is receiving the support of the administration, although there are practically no American investments in that French colony. The administration has arranged to enable the French government in that far-off land to acquire airplanes, bombers, guns and other munitions to resist the Japanese, while the administration has stopped Japanese from purchasing airplanes or other munitions.

French Indo-China is controlled by the French government which is in turn under the control of Hitler. With the United States aiding the British against Hitler in the Atlantic and helping Hitler in the Pacific against Japan, the foreign policy appears to be a mess. Mr. Roosevelt, however, has been given assurances by agents of the French Indo-China government that the local government will not take orders from the Hitler dominated French government, and on these assurances help was arranged.

The British have a stake in French Indo-China, but not the United States. The administration's action is designed to sustain the British.

Japan needs the United States more than the United States needs Japan in trade relations. This country is the market for Japanese silk, its principal export. Japan needs high octane gasoline, scrap iron and cotton, all of which have been furnished by the United States. Japan is the leading foreign market for American cotton, but the Japanese manufacture the raw cotton into goods and ship them back to the United States, making competition for the textile mills of New England and the South. In the same way Japan has been importing peeler logs from the Pacific northwest, then sending them back as plywood products to compete with plywood factories in Oregon and Washington.

It is within the range of possibility that President Roosevelt will order national guard units of the Pacific northwest to duty in the Philippines and Guam as tension in the Far East increases. Under the law authorizing the president to mobilize the national guard it is specifically provided that he can send guardsmen to these islands.

While nothing official has been announced, there is a prospect of Oregon and Washington each having an additional representative in congress, according to census returns. These states made substantial gains in population since 1930, far greater than the average for the country as a whole. Legislatures designate a congressional district, but as the Oregon and Washington legislatures will not be in session when house reapportionment is announced for congress next spring, pending creation of a district the new representative may be elected at large.

Opportunity to create a national park on the coast of Curry county, Oregon, which has the approval of the national park commission, department of the interior, and President Rooseelt, is running into opposition. The park would be in the same recreational class as Yellow-1 buying a full dress uniform.

War on Crickets Getting Results in Eastern Oregon

Generally lighter infestations and better methods of control marked the campaign against Mormon crickets and grasshoppers in eastern Oregon this last season, reports Lloyd D. Cowden, area supervisor of the control program for the bureau of entomology and plant quarantine.

Cowden conferred recently with Dr. Don C. Mote, entomologist at Oregon State college and state leader of the project, on plans for setting up a similar cooperative program next year such as has been carried on the past two seasons under a three-way arrangement by the state department of agriculture, the state college, and the federal bu-

Use of poison bait on a large scale for the first time this summer proved to be a big help in control, Cowden reported. He found that both the poison dusting and bait are necessary for effective control as the dust gets best results early in the season when weather is cold, while the bait is most effective later. It is possible to cover much more area in a given time with the bait than with the dusting method and it was found to give up to 95 percent kill.

Only the Indian reservation region of southern Wasco county showed materially heavier infestations than last year, Cowden reported. The outbreaks in Umatilla county were so much less that a continued control program may not be necessary.

Baker, Wallowa, Gilliam, Sherman and Jefferson counties also showed lighter outbreaks this year than last year. In the Indian lands of southern Wasco county 75 tons of poison bait were spread this year oer 13,-000 acres.

Past experience has been that three consecutive years of control work are necessary to show marked reduction in numbers. On this basis, those in charge of the state project feel encouraged over the success attained in Oregon with two years of organized cooperative control work said Dr. Mote.

Teachers to Meet at LaGrande, Oct. 14-15

The eastern Oregon conference of the Oregon State Teachers' association will meet October 14 and 15 in the gymnasium of the Eastern Oregon College of Education, La Grande. The conference is for teachers and school officials of Baker Grant, Malheur, Morrow, Umatilla, Union and Wallowa counties. About 1000 are expected to attend.

Lester D. Harris, principal of Baker high school, is president of the conference and with other officers stone, Glacier, Crater Lake and other national parks and be a novelty because it would be on a seashore. The idea captured the imagination of Mr. Roosevelt.

Sheepmen of Curry county, who use part of the proposed area as a range (they sold their wool for 431/2 cents a pound) and settlers in the Pistol river district are registering protests and the county court thinks the taxes from the sheepmen will be of greater benefit to the county than the money left by tourists. Governor Charles A Sprague and the Oregon highway commission have been urged to oppose the proposed park-at least a park of 50,-000 acres. The county court thinks 6,000 is sufficient. The bill is in committee and will not be reported until all parties interested have had a hearing. When the bill was introduced by Senator McNary by request it was supposed all citizens of Curry county favored the proposi-

As was to be expected, a howl is still going up over Elliott Roosevelt, who cannot fly, being commissioned as captain in the army air corps. Young Roosevelt's principal experience with flying was as aviation reporter for a newspaper before he took up radio work. Jimmie Roosevelt has resigned as lieutenant colone of marines and is now a captain in the marines reserve. As lieutenant colonel Jimmie borrowed instead of

Oregon Favored by Having Much Lawn Grass Seed

Oregon is undoubtedly the most favored spot in the United States from the standpoint of a wide selection of suitable lawn grasses, Harry A. Schoth, federal agronomist at O. S.C., told the Corvallis Men's Garden club recently.

Not only are many kinds of grass adapted for this state, but an unusually wide variety of excellent seed is available, as Oregon is now the principal state for the production of all lawn grass seed with the possible exception of Kentucky bluegrass and red top, said Schoth.

Not so many years ago the chief lawn plants used here and elsewhere were Kentucky bluegrass, red top and white clover, Schoth recalled. These are still good under many conditions, but they have been largely superseded in many regions by the bent grasses, the fescues and some others for specialized condi-

Bent grass came into use first about 1923 when seed of the Seaside bent became available. Later Astoria and highland bent seed supplies were developed. Schoth believes that the two later strains, particularly the highland bent, are more satisfactory for most lawns than the earlier Seaside which is shallow rooted and spreads by long stems above ground. Highland bent is the deepest rooted of all.

The two fescues most in demand for lawn grasses are chewing fescue and creeping red fescue. The latter is so new that only limited seed supplies are available. Chewing fescue is a fine leaved dark green, deep rooted grass and is able to take hard punishment. It is a bunch type grass, however, so will not easily fill in thin or bare spots.

Creeping red fescue looks like chewings but spreads underground. It also is deep rooted. As some of this seed is now being produced in Oregon there is hope that it may soon become plentiful enough so that mixtures of these two fescues may be extensively tried for lawn purposes, says Schoth.

and committees has worked out an excellent program.

Headline speakers are to be Dr. Ernest O. Melby dean, school of education, Northwestern university, and Miss Helen Hefferman, chief, division of elementary education, California state department of education.

A new section for school board members and clerks is to be introduced this year under the leadership of Dr. Roben J. Maaske, president of Eastern Oregon College of Edu-
