SCS Officers See Work Progress Here

Range improvement and other erosion-control demonstration work of Morrow county ranchers in the Heppner CCC camp area was studied and photographed during the last week by Soil Conservation service representatives from the Spokane regional office.

The results that local operators have obtained since the camp was located here in the fall of 1935 were praised by W. T. White, chief of the Pacific Northwest regional range management division, who headed the party.

"Fine growths of bunchgrass we have seen on ranges that had been grazed down pretty closely during drought and depression years good stands of important supplemental alfalfa feed along Willow and Hinton creeks and other streams in the camp area, and other progressive evidences of long strides in land-use improvement in this area tell their own story of the conservation accomplishments by farmers and ranchers in the Heppner area," White observed. "It certainly has been a pleasure to see these things and to observe how Morrow county landowners and operators are keeping pace with ranchers and farmers elsewhere in the Pacific Northwest and throughout the country in the practice of wise, profitable land use."

White also called attention to the fact that ranchers who have been able to defer spring use of their ranges by having additional pasture or hay are reporting gratifying return of the native perennial grasses on these ranges. He pointed out that proper livestock distribution and avoiding of too early spring grazing are effective range practices being followed successfully.

Accompanying White were Waldo Fransen of the Spokane range division, and Frank B. Harper and Howard Harris of the information service there.

The Heppner localities visited included Hinton creek, where much channel stabilization and realignment work has been done; Little Butter creek, Willow creek and Balm fork. The visitors were conducted through the camp area by R. T. Michener, camp engineer, and Thomas I. Wilson, camp farm planner. They also conferred with Camp Superintendent James E. Kistner, who is in charge of soil conservation service operations in the camp area.

Ranches visited and photographed for spring development gully dam, grass stand and other pictures included those of R. A. Thompson south of Heppner, W. H. Cleveland in both the Willow and Hinton valleys, John Brosnan on Little Butter creek, and Frank Wilkinson on Willow creek.

FETED IN ALASKA

T. H. Huddleston, known as "Pop" to his old-time friends in Alaska, is a brother of the late J. B. Huddleston, for many years local depot agent, and his retirement recently after 45 years of service with the government brought a large tribute from the Valdez Weekly Miner. According to the Miner, Mr. Huddleston started his government service at Huntington, this state in 1895, in charge of river work. Succeeding positions took him to Fort Casey, Bainbridge Island, Goat Island, Gray's Harbor, Everett, LaConner, Mt. Rainier park and other places before going to Alaska in 1910 and being located at Valdez since 1926 as superintendent of highways.

of Lexington, Oregon, said property may be sold as a whole or in separate parcels.

Dated this 31st day of October, 1940.
