Mattresses to be Made by Groups In Low Brackets

Highest quality cotton mattresses, made out of surplus cotton from southern states, will be available for low income rural families in Oregon at a cost of only the effort required to make them out of materials to be furnished, as the result of a cooperative arrangement completed recently, announces W. L. Teutsch, assistant director of the extension service at Oregon State college.

The mattress-making project will be started first in Malheur county next February, and will then be extended to Deschutes and Klamath counties in March, and to other counties as rapidly as the available staff can carry on the instructional and supervisory work, says Teutsch.

This is a cooperative project with the extension service carrying on the education work, while the AAA and Surplus Marketing administration will supply the materials and be responsible for their delivery and distribution.

Mattress-making centers will be established in the selected counties, where trained local leaders will be available to assist eligible families in making the mattresses. Experience in other states has shown that one mattress can be made in about a day by a family of four. Ordinary baled cotton, as well as a good grade of cotton ticking, will be supplied without cost.

Only rural families with an annual cash income of $500 or less (based on a family of four) will be eligible to make these mattresses out of free material. The AAA will certify the eligibility of families.

A mattress-making demonstration was recently held on the O. S. C. campus, with extension leaders from Washington, D. C., and from Texas explaining how the program has been carried on elsewhere. In Texas alone 191,000 such mattresses have been made.

Miss Lois Lutz, extension home management specialist, is leader of the project for Oregon. The program will be carried out only in such counties where it is approved by the local AAA committee and the program planning committee, says Teutsch, who adds that this offers an excellent reciprocal program for Oregon, which now produces some two million dollars' worth of winter legume seed used by the southern cotton farmers.
