

AAA Conference Brings Concord On Knotty Problems

Stress Need for More Local Information; Meets Set

"The spirit of cooperation was very evident and all seemed willing to give consideration to the other farmer's problems."

This statement, contained in one of seven committee reports adopted at the first state-wide AAA conference at Oregon State college, fittingly expressed the spirit prevailing throughout three days of concentrated attention to the various features of the farm program in Oregon, by some 200 county and state committeemen and extension agents.

The reports of the committees dealing with such things as the wheat, seed, and range programs, office efficiency, crop insurance, and information work, all emphasized the necessity of learning more about the local situation and adapting the program to serve best these needs.

Arrangements were made for close coordination of the work of each county committee with the forthcoming meetings in every county of the land use committees and the county outlook conferences sponsored by the extension service. It was agreed in general that the farm plan and estimate sheet sign-ups this year would not begin until after each county has had its second economic outlook meeting.

The question of marketing quotas for wheat was probably given the most detailed attention, following a report showing that the supplies on hand at the end of the next harvesting season will undoubtedly be considerably above the point at which a vote on wheat marketing quotas is required by law.

The conference adopted a report of the committee on wheat problems stating that "members of the group expressed themselves unanimously as being in favor of quotas." Plans were discussed for carrying word to the non-commercial wheat growers regarding the importance of favoring marketing quotas to prevent the collapse of wheat prices.

AAA officials from Washington, D. C., pointed out that if a referendum on market quotas is held and the plan is voted down, no government loans on wheat would be permitted for that marketing year. It was felt that the loss of the loan program would send wheat prices to record low levels, to the detriment of the entire agricultural and business structure of the country.

Present wheat supplies are such as to definitely assure a referendum to be held on quotas sometime between May 15 and June 10. Any farmer producing more than 200 bushels of wheat will be eligible to vote on marketing quotas.

Attending the conference from Morrow county were county committeemen Henry Baker, R. B. Rice and Oscar Peterson, and secretaries M. E. Cumings and C. D. Conrad. They announced that county meetings are being arranged for in the near future to bring the details of the 1941 program to the attention of all farmers and livestock men.
