Official Paper for Morrow County

Public Opinion

To the editor:

All of Europe is an armed camp, indeed. About all of the world is preparing for war, so they say, but I do not agree. The purpose of Germany, Russia, Italy, Japan and others in preparing for war for years has been to make war. That is, and has been, their main business. Here in the United States and in some European and South American countries tremendous expense has been necessitated in making arms, airplanes and war munitions—training men for the army, navy, pilots—BUT NOT FOR WAR. On the contrary this country and her neighbors are preparing for PEACE. We want no more territory. We have no aspirations for bigger lands. We are helping England, China, Greece, not as an act of war but as an aid to our peace. Whilst congress is debating and appropriating billions, the ultimate end in view is preparedness for defense and not for aggression. We honestly differ as to what will be the best method to keep us out of war. Remember there is this fundamental difference between America and the Axis powers: They are following their professed and regular business of war, pillage, and mass murder; but we are asking and praying for peace. Let's not forget this all important fact.

Men Sought for Marine Corps Reserve

Young men are being sought by the U. S. Marine corps recruiting service for enlistment in the Volunteer Marine Corps reserve. Men enlisted in the reserve will be assigned to active duty upon enlistment and transferred to recruit depots for training the same as received by those who enlist in the regulars.

If the Marine Corps is enlarged, permitting a larger number of vacancies for regular enlistments, they may be discharged from the reserve for the purpose of enlisting in the regular Marine Corps, if they desire.

The same standards and qualifications that govern the enlisting of men for the regular service will apply in all respects to the reservists enlisted. The term of enlistment, training, duty and opportunities for promotion will be the same as for men enlisted in the regular service. Although they are to be put on active duty immediately, a full four years of active duty cannot be guaranteed, as they would possibly be placed in an inactive status if the Marine Corps reserve should be demobilized prior to expiration of enlistment due to the termination of the emergency.

Farmers Study Home Lighting

As more and more Oregon rural homes become connected with electric service, interest is increasing in farm home lighting, reports Miss Lois Lutz, home management specialist of the Oregon State college extension service.

Oregon has consistently had a high percentage of rural homes served with electricity, and many of these wired years ago could modernize their existing lighting systems without much expense, to provide better light with less glare, says Miss Lutz. Recent figures show that about 42,000 of the 65,000 farms in the state have electric service. Of this number, approximately 4700 have been added by the eight REA financed systems.

To answer the increasing requests for information on rural home lighting the extension service issued bulletin No. 531 some time ago, entitled "Better Farm and Home Lighting." About the same time the United States department of agriculture published Farmers' Bulletin 1838-F, "Electric Light for the Farmstead." Either of these may be had free by Oregon citizens.

Light specialists now recommend much more light and better distributed light in homes than they did formerly. It is well for the eyes, they say, if all light in a room is well diffused with a minimum of glare and with no sharp contrast between lighted objects and their backgrounds.

Ceiling fixtures in which bare bulbs are used may be converted into fixtures giving diffused light by covering the bulbs with individual shades or by using a diffusing bowl, Miss Lutz points out. Methods of making these changes at moderate cost are discussed in the two bulletins.

Improvements of electric service in houses wired years ago sometimes involve putting in more convenient outlets and switches. Double or treble outlets in the living room increase the number of table and floor lamps the family can use, and such outlets in bedrooms are equally convenient for bedside lights and lamps attached to the head of the bed.

Homemakers to Hear Noted Men at OSC

Oregon State College—An unusual number of visiting speakers many of them internationally known, have been arranged for the eleventh annual conference for the study of home interests, to be held at Oregon State college February 25 to 28, according to the program recently issued by Mrs. Azalea Sager, head of home economics extension. More than 800 Oregon homemakers usually attend the conference, and at least this number is expected this year.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones, famed Christian leader and author, will address a convocation during the conference on "The Part of Religion in International Affairs." Dr. John T. Reiser of New York, executive secretary of the International Rural Missions organization, will speak on "Is a Christian Rural Civilization Possible?" Other visiting speakers will discuss the international situation, rural reading, home problems, and many subjects in the fields of nutrition, clothing, home management, and recreation.

The list of Oregon growers of certified seed potatoes in 1940 has just been compiled and is being sent free to all those who request it, says E. R. Jackman, extension farm crops specialist at Oregon State college.

About 3000 acres, the most ever entered for certification, were inspected, in spite of the increased fees for the work. Of the total area, 2054 acres passed the field inspection for certified seed.

Netted gems led with 834 acres, the largest acreage being in Klamath county. White rose followed with 655 acres, the bulk of which were in Multnomah county. Burbanks followed with 476 acres, and miscellaneous varieties contributed the remaining 89. The leading counties in acreage were Multnomah, Klamath, Lake, Clackamas, and Deschutes.
