Frat Men Told To Abandon Paddle

Oregon State College—The many values to college students of fraternity life and associations are lessened by the practice still followed to a certain extent of attempting to train pledges by paddling and other physical methods, Paul G. Hoffman, automobile manufacturing executive and national president of Delta Tau Delta fraternity, told the western division meeting of the national interfraternity council, in session here. Delegates were present from 20 colleges and universities.

"One of the essential differences between a dictatorship and a democracy lies in the fact that the first places its chief reliance on force and the second on persuasion," said Hoffman. "The discipline can and must be maintained in a fraternity without using physical force. In principle the paddle rates right along with the concentration camp." He urged training by use of freshman "bull session" discussions.

In a general conversation address Hoffman emphasized the place of the consumer, management, and government along with capital and labor in the American type of free enterprise. Unfair over used by any one of these five groups brings interference and a breakdown of such free enterprise, he held.
