Few Fishing Changes Result From New Law

Few changes in fishing regulations were made by the Oregon State Game commission under new powers granted under provisions of Senate Bill No. 147, passed in the recent session of the legislature and signed by Governor Charles A. Sprague.

In fact, no alterations were made in closures or openings of streams affected at the February meeting of the commission.

The principal action of the commission was the designation of deadlines, above which angling will not be permitted in the high reaches of coastal streams. This restriction affects the Nehalem, Salmon, Necanicum, Umpqua and Nestucca rivers and Rock creek, and will be in effect until June 1. This will provide sanctuaries in which fish may spawn and hatch and was considered vital to conservation of fish, particularly in the case of the steelhead trout.

An open season for steelhead trout from May 3 to November 1, both dates inclusive, was established in Burnt river, Owyhee river and Malheur river.

An all-year open season for game fish over ten inches long, including cutthroat and rainbow trout and both steelhead and salmon, when under 15 inches in length, was ordered in that portion of all coastal streams above the head of tidewater.

The bag limit for these streams between October 16 and April 11, both dates inclusive, is three such fish in any one day but not more than 6 such fish in any 7 consecutive days.
