Botulism Fatal to Chickens as to Man

Any spoiled canned foods which are even suspected of containing the botulism organisms are best completely destroyed or buried because they are just as poisonous to chickens as to man, says G. V. Copson, head of the bacteriology department at Oregon State college. Whole flocks of chickens have been destroyed by feeding spoiled corn or beans to them, causing the disease commonly called limberneck, which is in reality botulism.

"Since the same germ causes botulism in man and limberneck in fowls, it is highly dangerous to feed spoiled vegetables to chickens," says Copson. "Furthermore, any chance appearance of limberneck in chickens is a warning to be on the lookout for spoilage in home canned vegetables. The only safe way to be certain of avoiding botulism poisoning is to make sure that all home canned vegetables are boiled for 20 minutes before being tasted, and on the day they are to be consumed."

In fowls botulism produces a general intoxication by which the muscles become progressively paralyzed, Copson explained. First there is a paralysis of the leg and neck muscles, followed by a stopping of the heart. In a recent test conducted at the college a bantam hen fed canned corn inoculated with laboratory cultures of the botulism organism developed limberneck in 24 hours and died in two days.

Wheat, Ladino Clover, Fatten Beef Profitably

The use of wheat as a feed for fattening cattle with irrigated pasture is proving practical on a number of farms in Oregon, and it is shown by demonstration figures to be an economical method of producing beef. The results of such a feeding test are included in an experiment station bulletin entitled "Surplus Wheat Feeding Experiments in Oregon," issued at Oregon State college.

In tests carried on last summer it was found that wheat fed to cattle on irrigated ladino clover pasture gave results equal to or better than those obtained a year earlier when barley was used as a grain supplement. The test was made by using twelve head of beef calves pastured as two groups on the same area. Seven head were fattened first, followed by five later, with the result that the pasture supported almost exactly three animals per acre during the 190-day feeding period.

It was found that an average feeding of 3.76 pounds of wheat per head per day gave with the pasture an average gain per head of 156.91 pounds or an average daily gain per head of 1.65 pounds. Of the total gains on wheat and pasture amounting to 941.5 pounds per acre of pasture, 546.19 pounds were credited to the ladino clover and 395.13 to the wheat.

The returns from both pasture and grain were somewhat better when wheat was fed than when barley was fed under similar conditions a year earlier, the bulletin shows. As irrigated pasture is becoming more and more common throughout Oregon, its use in connection with wheat offers an important source of profit for the livestock raiser, according to those who are interested in livestock feeding.

The bulletin which reports on this phase of wheat feeding experiments also includes the results of using wheat as a feed for growing and fattening cattle with hay, growing and fattening sheep and lambs, and feeding wheat to dairy cows, hogs and draft horses. Copies may be had free at any county extension office.

New $1.50 Drivers' Licenses Coming Soon

When Oregon's 490,000 drivers renew their drivers' licenses for the 1941-1943 license period, they will pay $1.50 for their new licenses instead of one dollar, as in the past. Current licenses expire June 30 and new permits will be required on the first of July.

Under the act passed by this year's legislative session, a fund to be called "motor vehicle accident fund" is established in this state. Along with the one dollar fee for each driver's license, the secretary of state is required by the new law to collect an additional fifty cents which goes into this fund. The fund will be used to pay hospitalization expenses for indigents injured in automobile accidents.

There has been no change in the examination requirements for driver's licenses this year, according to word from the secretary of state's office. Drivers holding current licenses may renew without submitting to any examination this year. Those who were not licensed during the current period—1939 to 1941—will be required to take the law examination, the eye test and the drive test. Persons over 70 years of age, regardless of whether they hold current licenses or not, also must take these tests.

Application forms for renewals will be available about May 1 and will be distributed through various sources including sheriffs, chiefs of police, license examiners, or they may be obtained by writing to the secretary of state's office at Salem. The 1941-1943 drivers' licenses will not be valid till June 15th, however.
