Official Paper for Morrow County

The Right Spirit

COMMUNITY cooperation is a fine thing, and an outstanding exemplification of it was shown at the Lions dinner here Monday evening in which Lions of Athena and The Dalles joined the local club in breaking the bread of good fellowship.

All too often in the past have neighboring communities of the section competed with each other in attempting to obtain improvements, which had they been located in either would have reflected mutual benefits; and by attacks upon each other probably drove the improvement into another section where neither were the least bit helped.

There are big opportunities for development of the entire Columbia basin region at present, what with the big defense contracts being awarded. We can already see the big projects underway at Pendleton and in the vicinity of Hermiston, and we here in Morrow county believe we have something mighty good to offer as an inducement for establishment of a munitions plant in the north end. We should continue relentlessly to work for it; but, let us keep in mind that any development in the region will bring markets closer for our wheat and livestock, reflecting higher prices for these industries which will always remain the backbone of Morrow county.

And so, we say, community cooperation is a fine thing. It is wholesome to know men in neighboring towns who are thinking of problems similar to those faced at home; to know that these men are human, and that, in the final analysis, all have a common problem, the building of empire the accomplishment of which far outweighs petty jealousies and animosities.

The fellowship of communities as exemplified by the Lions dinner here Monday evening shows the right spirit—a spirit that is strongly to be desired in building up strong national unity in the present defense crisis.

Standard Oil Offers 4-H Scholarships

Six $100 scholarships have been announced by Standard Oil Co. of California to be awarded in 4-H club work, says L. E. Dick, local agent.

These scholarships or awards are to be disbursed by the Oregon State college to those Oregon farm boys of good character and members of either the 4-H clubs or Future Farmers of America, who have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the college their qualifications for study either at the Oregon State college or to continue in whatever agricultural project at home they may desire to pursue. The following qualifications with reference to those awards have been established:

1. The award or scholarship is to be known as the "Standard Oil Company of California Award."

2. Four scholarships shall be given to members of the 4-H clubs and two to members of the Future Farmers of America.

3. Three awards are to be made for students desiring to attend Oregon State college. Three awards are to be made for continuation of home agricultural projects under the supervision of county farm agents.

OSC Orators Deal With Problems of Present Day Life

Oregon State College—Three students here who recently won first places in oratorical contests dealt with three subjects of current lively interest throughout the country. Maxine Chin of Portland, an American born Chinese, appealed for more opportunities and understanding for the American citizens of other races who, while born here, are still considered "foreigners."

Jane Steagall of Portland won first place in the women's division of the state Old Line oratorical contest with a plea for better treatment of the mentally ill. Clifford Culley of Weston won first in the men's division of the Old Line contest with a discussion of how Americans can help in the eradication of syphilis.

"We Who Are Without a Country" was the title of Miss Chin's oration, in which she recounted actual experiences of American-born Chinese in seeking employment in this country. She herself had been given employment in a department store as a special clerk but was suddenly released when complaints were made to the store that in hiring her it was "depriving an American girl of a job."

"We do not want nor expect you to take us to your hearts as members of your own family or your own social set," Miss Chinn explained. "We want only to be accepted as Americans and to enjoy the privileges of Americans.... The present situation cannot be untangled by either you or me alone, but through cooperative action on your part as well as mine."

Miss Steagall used the overcrowded and admittedly unsatisfactory conditions in the Oregon State hospital as the basis for her oration, but said that the problem is a national rather than a local one, with its basis in an ancient stigma against mental disorders as compared with physical diseases. She said that the general public attitude toward those committed remains one of ignorance and indifference, the procedure of commitment "outrageous and senseless," and the remedial measures hopelessly inadequate.

Some of the conditions cited have just been dealt with by the legislature.

Number of Factors Affect Egg Quality

Breeding, feeding, management, and storage all affect egg quality, which is so vital to the prosperity of the Oregon poultry industry, say Noel L. Bennion, extension specialist in poultry husbandry, and F. E. Price, agricultural engineer, at Oregon State college, in a new station circular, No. 138, on "Factors Affecting Egg Quality."

Oregon's poultry industry has been built on a quality basis more than is the case in states farther east, because of the necessity of shipping so much of the state's output to markets thousands of miles away. Even so, fewer than 60 per cent of the market eggs produced in the state qualify for the top grades, a fact which indicates room for much improvement, the authors point out.

Because egg quality is inherited, selective breeding is important. Ways for improving this are discussed in the bulletin. Feeding methods affect egg quality through yolk color and strength of the shell. Management plays its part in the greater percentage of clean and uniform eggs where flocks are kept in desirable surroundings and where eggs are handled properly.

After high quality eggs are produced the kind of storage they are subjected to can determine their quality when they reach the market. Various types of coolers and humidifiers for storage rooms are described in the bulletin.

Pork Demand Points To More Wheat Feed

With hogs at their highest market level for several years and prospects of continued demand for pork, Oregon producers have an opportunity to convert low-priced wheat into high-priced meat, judging from the results obtained in surplus wheat feeding experiments at the Oregon experiment station.

Wheat has been fed to hogs in direct comparison with corn and other feed grains at the stations and has been found just as valuable pound for pound. In one test the average amount of feed required for 100 pounds gain was 369 pounds of corn, and 364 pounds of wheat. Furthermore, it was found that wheat-fed hogs had firmer carcasses than corn-fed hogs shipped in from the corn belt, which confirms the oft-repeated opinion of Portland meat packers that western wheat-fattened hogs excel in this respect.

The tests carried on recently bear out previous experiments to the effect that the feeding value of ground wheat and ground corn are equal so far as average gains with hogs are concerned, and that western buyers at least prefer the wheat-fattened animals, say O. S. C. livestock men.

BOWLING IS A LOT OF FUN, and—

THE RECORD.... Facts That Concern You

No. 25 of a Series

EVERY
HAS ONE OR TWO

In a school full of bright, self-respecting students, there are very likely to be one or two completely lacking in good common sense. And that goes for business, too... particularly the beer retailing business.

Out of thousands of beer retailers who conduct respectable, law-abiding businesses, there may be a few "dunce" retailers who disobey the law or permit anti-social conditions.

These few unwanted retailers are a menace to the future of the beer industry... and also of the benefits beer has made possible. Right here in Oregon, beer provides employment for 13,238 persons, supports an annual payroll of $11,541,550 and contributed $617,020.86 last year in state taxes.

It is the brewers' responsibility to make good beer—the retailers' responsibility to sell beer in wholesome surroundings—and the legally constituted authorities' responsibility to enforce the laws. All of these, working together with the public, are needed to protect the future of beer.

You, too, can help the cause of moderation by (1) patronizing only reputable places where beer is sold; (2) and reporting any violation you may observe to the duly constituted authorities.

BEER...a beverage of moderation
